Do Not Go Gentle

Adam DeTour

Alexander the Great used to say that sleep and sex reminded him that he was, alas, mortal. (This may seem like a dumb observation, since everyone knows that the Greek gods acted like bonobos on a regimen of poppers. But, hey, the man conquered Persia by the age of 25, and I just wasted 10 minutes coming up with a joke about monkeys on alkyl nitrates. I yield the point.) My own morning routine is a fugue of mortal reminders, of proof in the Law of Entropy as It Applies to My Face. Take the daily bathroom mirror crisis. Every week sees another outbreak of hair along the ridge of my ear, out of the inner sanctum of my nostrils, from an eyebrow that looks increasingly like a tasered weasel. Crow's feet spread into elaborate diagrams of crow's dance steps, a waltz swelling into a dermatological rumba. Since the eyes are windows on the soul, my soul is apparently made of watered down tomato juice. And that's what I see after my first cup of coffee.

It's human nature to want to dam the flow of time, to patch one's crumbling hide with unicorn blood or Crème de la Mer. Hence my growing expenditures on hair product. And hence this health and beauty issue. Because, while you can embrace decay in the wisdom that the universe is transient, there's more honor in taking up arms—or at least moisturizers—against a sea of troubles.

MOVE OVER MEAT EATERS, THERE'S a new tofu in town. Kristen Thibeault, chef and proprietor of Kombu Kitchen, launched her Lynn-based delivery service in March, aiming to bridge the gap between easy and healthful eating. Her mission: "To show the world that plant-based food can stand up against the finest popular cuisine," says the nutrition and wellness counselor. Thibeault introduces a new menu—five entrees, a vegetable, soup, breakfast and dessert—every week, delivering the food to local clients' doorsteps and shipping national orders. "Living healthy is not an all or nothing kind of thing," says Thibeault. "We can change a few things every day and see monumental shifts in our lives." But don't tie-dye your cashmere just yet. Plant-based diets aren't confined to activists. "I own a closet full of 6-inch designer shoes and not one pair of Birkenstocks," says Thibeault, "so it's not really a hippie thing."

QUITE THE MOUTHFUL

With the cold weather settling in, it's time to hunker down at YoMa with a bowl of ohnnohkohswe. Don't be intimidated by the name. The Burmese dish, which translates to chicken coconut noodle soup, is a relative of the more familiar Thai curries, but this dish reduces the spice, ramps up the heartiness and brims with springy wheat noodles. Sharpened with sliced raw shallots and a squirt of lime juice, ohnnohkohswe is at least as good for the soul as the usual chicken soup. Just way more interesting. Elizabeth Bomze

WAIT CRIME

TO THE PERSON BEHIND ME IN line: I get it; you're in a rush. But what makes you think your business is more important than mine? Why are you giving me this look as if I'm taking forever, and I should let you go ahead of me? Maybe I have an important place to be. I probably don't, but your judgmental facial expressions are unnecessary.

Out of line?

To Instagram users: I'm stressed, and my social anxiety has reached new heights. I don't understand why it's so important for everyone to have more followers than people they are following. Just follow me back! I'm self-conscious about the fact that you'll look at my page and see less than 100 followers and judge me. I promise you will enjoy my photos. I'm funny and use filters wisely. Just follow me back.

New user

To Dana on Showtime's original hit series* Homeland: Why do you always look like you've just received the worst news ever? Your constant facial concern and indecisiveness is distracting us from what really matters: your father's inability to move his mouth normally. I don't know why you haven't been put in therapy yet considering the constant trauma you must face, but I suggest you seek some immediate mental help.

Homeland fan

To Demi Lovato's eyebrows: What happened? You were once slender and shapely, but suddenly you transformed into what appears to be Brooke Shields'/caveman brows. Your evolution has been the most fascinating physical phenomena since two inches of snow covered the streets of downtown Los Angeles in 1932. For the sake of your viewers, stop with the change in size and shape. Everyone is getting confused and distracted by the constant distortion. Stick with one shape so we can all move on.

First Taste

BON APPETIT

IT'S BEEN JUST OVER TWO years since Patrick Lynch and Ali Fong's Vietnamese concept, Bon Me, was named a winner in the first Boston Food Truck Challenge. In that time, their mobile family has grown with a second truck, and the husband-and-wife team show no signs of braking soon. In fact, they're taking a new road. Come mid-January, Bon Me's first stand-still location opens in Kendall Square—a fitting space for a kitchen born of a competition to promote innovation.

"We're really excited to be able to operate on this side of the river," says Lynch, who's been food-trucking full-time since Bon Me's debut in April 2011. "The big upside of the restaurant is that we have that long-term outlook. We're able to really invest in an area, which is a little tough for trucks."

The new menu is largely based on the truck's dishes—bahn mi sandwiches, soba or rice noodle salads and rice bowls topped with Asian veggies and a choice of spice-rubbed chicken, barbeque pork or tofu and shiitake mushrooms. But Fong, who trained at the Culinary Institute of America and worked for Patricia Yeo at Sapa in New York, wants to explore the benefits of a stationary kitchen. "Having a brick-and-mortar location means we can do things that we can't do on the truck," she explains.

Fong's experimenting with daily specials and sides like mustard greens with chili oil and kabocha squash soup. "We're going to ramp up a lot of our vegetarian and vegan options," she adds. A new pâté for the bahn mi will also debut. Developed by an employee for a class, the mushroom-based vegan spread gives veg-head diners a similar Bon Me experience to their carnivorous counterparts.

With an order-at-the-counter setup and food ready in minutes, the restaurant seats 15–20 and another 10 outside during warmer months.

Setting up shop doesn't mean anything is slowing down for Lynch and Fong, who are already thinking ahead to more mobile possibilities. The plan is to just keep on truckin'.

Q&A

FOOD FIGHT

Milton restaurant Abby Park's executive chef Tony DeRienzo cooks the competition at his mixed martial arts matches.

Which requires more training: being a chef or a MMA fighter?

It's like anything in life, you have to practice every day to be really good at it. And if you take time off, you're not progressing, you're regressing. I'd say with culinary arts and martial arts it's the same thing. If I'm not out there always looking at new ingredients and talking to chefs, you get a little stale. I'd say the same thing with mixed martial arts. Luckily for me, because [my trainer] fights in the UFC, [he] trains with all high-level fighters. He travels all the time. He'll fight in Vegas; he'll fight in Seattle; he'll fight all over. He brings back all these great moves. Like, it's just never-ending. You can practice it for 20, 30 years and still not know it all, believe it or not. I feel like culinary arts are the same way.

How do you prepare for your martial arts competitions?

I weigh about 203 pounds. I was 205 yesterday, I'm 203 today, but it stays right around there. But we'll see, tonight I'll be 205 again. I'll fight at 185, so I'll diet down to 195, and then about two days before the fight I'll cut 10 pounds. It basically happens overnight. I go in a sauna. All the water comes out of you, so you look all lean and ripped. During that period, I drink a gallon of water every day. The week before [the sauna], I start drinking two gallons, and, believe it or not, that helps get the water out of you.

How do you incorporate your healthy lifestyle into your cooking?

I just put a menu item on a month ago, and we call it skinny salmon. We tried to come up with a name for it to do it justice, but it's pistachio-crusted salmon, organic brown rice, asparagus and then it gets goji berry vinaigrette. It's a superfruit from China, and it has antioxidants and vitamins B and C. The nutrients in it are ridiculous. I've made a mangosteen vinaigrette. I garnish some of my specials with hemp seed. It's very high in protein and omega 3 fatty acids, which are very good for your heart and your cardiovascular system.

Do you crave any specific junk food while you're training?

Chocolate chip ice cream and milk chocolate. Just, like, plain blocks of chocolate. I could eat it with a fork and a knife, you know?

Drink of the Moment

APPLE OF OUR EYE

NAME: Rocky Top.

PRICE: $10

INGREDIENTS: Old Smokey Apple Pie Moonshine, Carriage House Apple Brandy, apple cider, sweet vermouth.

TASTE: Its ontological apple-ness is cider, not juice, so the initial sip is subtly tart. The fruit quickly slides into a clean, mellow balance with rounded, boozy notes on the back. Far less cloying than a bottle of Woodchuck, this isn't an apple drink to tempt the innocent. It's for grown-ups.

BALANCE: Extremely fine. Served neat, the moonshine is as sweet as Drambuie. "It has a lot of cinnamon and sugar," explains bartender Lillian Schmertz. But the brandy slices through the sugar while the vermouth gives the whole a fruity polish.

PRESENTATION: Served over ice in a mason jar, with an apple-ring garnish, this is the cultural opposite of martini service. It's practically a declaration of yokel pride. "We're big into the South," says Schmertz.

LOCAL SOURCING: "Boston trends toward the seasonal," says Schmertz. "We get the apple cider from Carlson Orchards in Harvard, and we'll run [the drink] until we can't get cider anymore." So until the apple harvest runs out, the Rocky Top bestrides the cocktail menu's summit of popularity.

PAIR IT WITH: Barbecue, of course. "It pairs well with the richness," says Schmertz. "With pork belly, but also with desserts like butterscotch."

Beauty

A Char, Char Better Thing

A facial cleanser made with activated charcoal might sound like an inflammatory idea, but vegan skincare and beauty line Shamanuti's Activated Charcoal Cleanser fights fire with fire. Oxygen-treated carbon's super-porous properties act like a magnet for impurities, drawing them out of your skin.

Though the wash resembles gray sludge, it goes on mostly clear, with the brightening and exfoliating properties of the charcoal washing away weary winter skin. It's ideal for treating sensitive spots, rosacea, eczema or just banishing that patch of dry under-eye skin caused by cranked up radiators. You can also use the soot-inspired product as a deodorizing body wash or shaving cream. Just don't try to use it to light your grill—we haven't product tested for that yet.

RIBELLE WITH A CLAUSE

New projects from big names

WORD HAS IT THAT that the folks behind Watertown's Strip-T's will open a second restaurant in the Tamarind Bay space in Brookline's Washington Square. However, chef/co-owner Tim Maslow is reluctant to spill the details.

"It's a confidential deal," he says. But applying for a liquor license means giving up information such as the name of the business (Ribelle, Italian for rebel). Maslow does reveal that the restaurant will have close to 70 seats and, permits pending, seasonal outdoor dining. He won't provide an opening date ("that's a no-no"), but eventually allows he'd "love to open in March." What Maslow would like best, he says wistfully, "is to be that guy who opens quietly in the middle of the night." Fat chance.

ANOTHER PROJECT SURE TO ATTRACT attention is the takeover of the former Paddock space in Somerville by chef Ana Sortun (Oleana, Sofra). Slated for a summer opening, the as-yet-untitled—"It has a few names," says Sortun—eatery will feature an all mezze menu and a "big bar" starring "big cocktails." Cassie Piuma, chef de cuisine at Oleana (and an 11-year vet of Sortun's 12-year-old Cambridge restaurant) will be both chef de cuisine and Sortun's partner in the new venture.

AFTER THE HOLIDAY CHAOS, AND IN the midst of winter's chill, comes the perfect time to savor hearty fare like soups, stews and braises, as well as curl up with an enticing new cookbook. Stewed, the latest from chef Dave Becker of Sweet Basil (with stunning photography by Nina Gallant) fills the bill, and boasts a kitchen-friendly rubber cover.

Diet Hard

FAD ABOUT YOU

Some people will try anything to fit into their high school jeans—though few will admit to a diet of straight baby food or that lemon juice/cayenne pepper/maple syrup concoction. Here are some of the more questionable—and creative—fad diets that lasted about as long as the sugar high from a cranberry cocktail cleanse. LEORA YASHARI

Dan Watkins

THE COTTON BALL DIET Of all the inedible things we put into our bodies (R.I.P. Twinkies), cotton balls should never be one of them. Purportedly used by model wannabes and those without taste buds, the diet necessitates the white puffs be dipped in gelatin or juice and then swallowed. They'll fill you up (like a teddy bear) while providing all the nutrition you'd expect from a product more often used to remove makeup.

HALLELUJAH DIET This one's based on Genesis, 1:29: "And God said, Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed...to you it shall be for meat." Reverend George Malkmus interpreted this as a higher plan for a strict vegan diet that's 85 percent raw. This is a great choice for those who skip dessert but never miss a service.

PURPLE FOOD DIET If you've ever asked yourself WWMCD (What Would Mariah Carey Do), here's your answer. Purple foods, such as beetroots, plums and eggplant, supposedly rejuvenate the skin and help you maintain a steady weight—or so says many a celeb. Of course, there's the problem of grape soda, purple Dum Dums and anything that comes out of Willy Wonka's factory.

TAPEWORM DIET Before you start to squirm, just think—unless you're vegan or vegetarian, you eat animals anyway, right? Add a little tapeworm to your fried chicken and you'll soon be eating guilt free. The tapeworm diet has been around since the dawn of dieting itself and now comes in a handy-dandy pill form. Downside: You're eating tapeworms.

Wine

Small Wonders

If you're looking for a potion to warm you on a January night, the misleadingly named petite sirah (not at all petite, not syrah) may be just the thing. This big California red regularly tips the scales at over 14 percent alcohol, but in recent years, winemakers have learned how to tame the beast. Today, the best examples are so concentrated with black fruit flavors that they achieve harmony and balance. The following blind-tasting winners are worth a look, especially if you need a match for a hearty stew on a wintry evening.

TWO ANGELS PETITE SIRAH, HIGH VALLEY, 2007 ($18, WINE EMPORIUM) This blockbuster comes from a mountain vineyard. Opaque in color, there's a lush, velvety richness and distinctive notes of black pepper and licorice to accent the chocolaty, plummy fruit. Here's a delicious wine that shows off what petite sirah does best: provide intense flavor without the mouth-gripping tannins you might expect.

BOGLE PETITE SIRAH, CALIFORNIA, 2010 ($12, MARTY'S, NEWTON) A huge bargain, this petite sirah is sourced from Sacramento Delta vineyards. It has a smoky, fruity aroma along with that signature black pepper note. It's velvety and soft on the palate with a supple richness. The tannins are mild, and the flavors exude crushed red and black berries. This could be one of the better retail bargains of the season.

GIRARD PETITE SIRAH, NAPA VALLEY, 2010 ($30, BAUER WINE AND SPIRITS) This is a massive, mouth-filling wine that shows the gamey, meaty side of the grape. An old vine blend with flavors of wild mushroom, bacon and the same dark chocolate lushness you find in other petite sirahs, the Girard also features substantial tannins. It's a handcrafted, extremely full-bodied wine aged 19 months in barrel to soften its intensity. A great candidate for collecting, this bottle will mellow and develop some finesse over a decade in the cellar.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Samira and Ragab Hamdoun never planned to sell their hummus, but they took the leap after constant raves from family and friends. It helped that Samira worked at Formaggio Kitchen, and for a while their recipe was an exclusive at the store. But business quickly outgrew that corner of the market, and the couple set up shop in Belmont, expanding their wares to include a variety of handmade Middle Eastern favorites, including Egyptian ful medammes (garlicky mashed fava beans with tahini, lemon and olive oil) and the sweet, tangy roasted red pepper–walnut dip known as muhammara. This month, the Hamdouns are launching a full takeout menu, complete with soups and shawarma. All it took was one tasty dip, and now their business is spreading.

JEWEL-IA CHILD

A biography of a quirky culinary icon

TALL, DISTINCTIVE AND A late-bloomer who blossomed on TV at 50, Julia Child became synonymous with classic French cooking. But in Bob Spitz's cozy, chatty book it's amazing to discover how long this dynamo struggled to get Mastering the Art of French Cooking published.

The Paris Cordon Bleu cooking school hadn't been welcoming to this future star. Julia also battled with her French coauthors while maintaining their important, even loving relationship. Childs' book—later a gourmet Bible garnering gigantic sales—taught 1960s women, then more accustomed to canned hash and dreary gravies, the laborious rewards of cultivating elegant and precise French "Kwi-zeen" (Julia's saucy term). When WGBH gave Julia her French Chef show, with that signature voice trilling merrily in the upper registers, she managed to combine French culinary rigor with humor and homey charm.

Dearie: The Remarkable Life of Julia Child

by Bob Spitz
Child lived in Cambridge.

Husband Paul, a quirky intellectual and artist, was the man behind the woman. Julia went on to gigantically influence chefs, restaurants, cookbooks, television and taste. As food tilted toward skinnier nouvelle cuisine she persisted with her rich buttery ways. But, never one for stuffiness, she eventually adapted. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 347: Everywhere she went—in the subway, or in stores, or on the street, or in elevators, or in business offices—people stopped to congratulate her and tell her how much they enjoyed the show. To thank her for The French Chef. To thank her—imagine that! Even Paul got a taste of the billowing acclaim. During one of his routine medical checkups, a nurse pulled him aside and said, "Please tell your wife how wonderful I think she is! Even my husband, who never looks at television, says he wouldn't be anywhere Monday night at eight but right at home glued to that machine!"

TASTE TEST

FIT OF PEAK A Piton on St. Lucia, viewed from Boucan by Hotel Chocolat

"YOU SHOULD SEE THE mangos in St. Lucia," said the cab driver on the way to Logan Airport. "The juice just drips down your hands."

St. Lucia, nicknamed the Helen of the West Indies, is a 27-mile-long island of mountainous rain forest, with the pair of lush twin Pitons acting as the destination's gateway. Though it's praised as one of the world's top locations for honeymooners, the real passion here is in how the St. Lucians feel about their food, culture and the Jurassic Park-type scenery that can't be captured by a Canon. Hotels and restaurants obsessively incorporate the natural surroundings into their architecture and cuisine, turning themselves into vessels for the tourism board. Even if mangos aren't on the menu, you can taste a clear sense of place.

St. Lucia is the product of a drawn out tug-of-war between the French and British. The natives speak fluent English, but also a Creole mixture of broken French called Patois. There's a lot of English influence at Boucan by Hotel Chocolat, located on the outskirts of Soufrière (a French name, of course). The hotel, which started as a chain of chocolate shops in the United Kingdom that now stretches all the way to Newbury Street, is built on a 268-year-old 140-acre cocoa plantation called the Rabot Estate. The décor is the exact opposite of what you'd imagine if Wonka or Hershey owned a tropical resort. Here, rooms are polished in understated, rich cacao tones, and the entire space is open to the outdoors, most noticeably in the open-sky rainforest shower made with slabs of rock and small stones. The lobby itself acts as merely a frame for the Petit Piton, the steeper of the two prominent mountains.

There's chocolate in literally every dish on the menu, complete with a grinder full of cocoa nibs on each table, but the best way to attain death by chocolate is the hotel's Tree to Bar experience. Like something out of a Kashi commercial, guests chop down their own cocoa pods with long-stemmed machetes before sampling the mucous-like seeds inside, which surprisingly taste like lychee. The next stop is the greenhouse-style nursery where the cocoa ferments, dries and roasts. Guests also graft their own cocoa trees, which are identified, so the staff can find the exact plant on a return trip. Later, the hotel's chef demonstrates how to make 65 percent dark chocolate by grinding cocoa nibs, cocoa butter and powdered sugar with a mortar and pestle. After some not so sweet, sweat-inducing labor, guests leave with a bar of their own creation.

The St. Lucian landscape resembles the verdant, volcanic terrain of Hawaii more than it does the surrounding Caribbean islands. Roads are carved precariously into the banana-leaf lined mountains, so the easiest (and safest) way to admire the jungle is on Rain Forest Adventures' open-air tram. Set up like an amusement park ride, the tram glides through all four densely covered layers of the forest and reaches more than 1,400 feet above sea level. If you're more comfortable below the canopies, try the Rainforest Spa at Sugar Beach. Wedged between the two Pitons, this resort is made up of seven tree house treatment rooms built into the forest at varying heights above a small stream. The miniature log cabins feel like the inside of a tree trunk, and the services include all natural elements from the island, such as bananas, coconuts and even mud from the nearby sulfur springs.

Castries, the capital port city in the north, is the most metropolitan part of the island with a population of 65,000 (a number inflated by tourists). Most towns and villages have a Saturday market—Castries' is open everyday except Sundays. Even though the pavilion is clogged with cruise shippers, it's worth merging with the masses to find vendors selling indigenous fruits that they'll gladly slice open at their stands. Try the skull-sized avocados, the boiled red nuts and the soursop, an island fruit with a prickly green surface and a cream-colored fibrous center. Orange-yellow coconuts, purchased from the trunks of trucks, are whacked with machetes so customers can gulp down the water inside.

With its poetic greenery and simple, savory flavors, St. Lucia is a powerful aphrodisiac. Here, the honeymoon stage never really ends. ✖✖✖

HAUTE PROPERTY

Asana has transcendent moments under chef Rachel Klein.

★★★½☆ Asana
Mandarin Oriental, Boston,
776 Bolyston St., Boston
(617-535-8800)
mandarinoriental.com/boston/fine-dining/asana

COLOR PALATE Black cod with fish roe is a refined dish to enjoy in an elegant dining room.

NAMED FOR THE SANSKRIT word for a yoga position, Asana found its culinary tranquility—or perhaps complacency—stirred when Rachel Klein took over the role of executive chef last March. Prior to Klein, who helmed Om's kitchen at its peak and previously served as executive chef at Aura at the Seaport Boston Hotel, Asana offered safe, swanky hotel food—the equivalent of a fancified P.F. Chang's for the masters of the universe staying at the Mandarin Oriental. There was the $50 steak, the $30 chicken, the $30 fish. The dishes, like the polished wood and drapery, reflected a generic Asian-ish sensibility. While those stand-bys remain, Klein has introduced an elegant, confident sense of place with a menu shifted to a more seasonal, local focus.

Take the outstanding New England clam chowder ($9), a tureen of minced clams, cream and chives with a subtly briney stock evocative of a satisfying day on the ocean. It's an ideal lunch when paired with the exceptional bread basket, comprising rolls and crisps so airy that they melt like spun sugar in your mouth. The gnocchi ($15, appetizer; $27, entrée) was hearty winter fare, with tender potato pasta topped with salty gouda and duck confit, sweet diced apples and sautéed Brussels sprout leaves. Earthy and savory, it tasted delicious despite lacking the advertised duck cracklings. In contrast, the moulard duck ($33) looked beautiful—with a perfectly crackled scored breast surrounded by Brussels sprouts and a sweet date sauce—but was starkly undercooked (although ordered medium rare).

On the other hand, the ridiculously priced Brandt strip steak ($46) arrived medium-rare as ordered, but the meat proved on the chewy side. Sizable at 14 ounces, the slab of rather bland beef lacked marbling and was a workout for the jaw. The black cod dish ($29)—a visually stunning canvas of white and red—embodied the best of Klein's cooking. Tender cod and root vegetables floated in a dashi broth with red fish roe and a topping of sesame-chili kale crisps evoking nori. Like the chowder, it was reminiscent of the sea without being overbearing.

Not every seafood dish impressed as much. The hamachi sashimi ($16) overreached, the fish being overwhelmed by pickled shiitakes and spicy dried-cherry togarashi, while the ubiquitous deep-fried Brussels sprout leaves made this appetizer a study in superfluity. The most disappointing item was a yellowfin tuna melt with truffle cheese ($15) at lunch. The meat was so generic it could've been stuffed inside a blue plate special.

If you're at Asana for lunch, pay a little more and get the gooey, luxurious, fork-and-knife short rib sandwich ($18), a slow-braised concoction served with caramelized onions over sourdough. Unlike some of the more truncated openers—the beet appetizer ($14), for example—the sandwich was very generously sized, and it arrived overlaid with arugula, negating the need for a vegetable starter.

Klein oversees the dining operations of Asana, M Bar, the Mandarin and its residences, a job that requires the juggling of competing demands. She has to meet the expectations of traveling CEOs looking to conspicuously consume a strip steak with a $18 cocktail (the Stately Romance, with its Earl Grey–infused gin, is a pricey treat). She has to appeal to food nerds hoping to see the flashes of brilliance she showed at Om, along with turning out more value-conscious, neighborhood fare for the after-work crowd. Asana's food, under Klein, is better than ever. Yet the patches of unevenness on the menu suggests that a hotel restaurant, even a fine one, isn't always the best setting for her gifts. ✖✖✖

SLIMMING DOWN AFTER THE HOLIDAYS

Most of us find that our pants are a little too snug after the holidays thanks to lots of parties, appetizers, cookies and cocktails. The most common New Year's resolution is to slim down.

If you have an extra inch or two, or would like to jump-start a more serious slim-down, there is an instant gratification method of body contouring. Bella Contour is a new non-surgical way to reduce unwanted body fat and inches. Our treatment utilizes ultrasound energy to stimulate fat cells, causing the fat cells to empty their contents and shrink back to their original size.

This body contouring treatment is ideally suited for women and men who have unwanted fat around the waist, love handles, buttocks, and thighs.

The treatment is comfortable; it feels like a warm massage. It is extremely safe, non-invasive, completely pain-free, there is literally no recovery or downtime, and no known side-effects.

4 to 10 sessions are required, and at SkinHealth, we typically see results even after the first treatment!

MISERY HAS COMPANY

Les Misérables ★½

ONE OF THE STUPIDEST decisions in the history of the Academy Awards was the coronation of Tom Hooper two years ago. For helming The King's Speech, a perfectly forgettable (and rather appallingly photographed) bit of awards bait from the Weinstein Company, Hooper was elevated above contemporaries like David Fincher, Darren Aronofsky, David O. Russell and the Coen Brothers.

Hooper, a BBC mainstay also known for directing HBO's John Adams miniseries, did not take the honor lightly. He's used his newfound clout to tackle an impossible mission—the long-awaited adaptation of the ever-running Les Misérables, Claude-Michel Schönberg and Alain Boubil's stage production that has stymied filmmakers for the 27 years it has packed in more than 60 million happy customers. The financial success of this film is a foregone conclusion, as are the inevitable awards-season hosannas. This is regrettable because Les Misérables is nearly unwatchable.

"It's like an exercise in how not to direct a film," I jotted in my notes shortly after the screening. The showing was, of course, packed with studio-selected musical theater aficionados who stood and applauded after every number until the tedium set in, and even this handpicked crowd could no longer bother to feign enthusiasm.

For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did too many years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass with an infant daughter adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by.

Schönberg and Boubil's songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades. But if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Plus, somewhere along the way, a decision was made to make Les Misérables "gritty."

Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead we're stuck with grimy, under-populated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. Rather than embracing the artifice of musical theater, Hooper goes miles in the opposite direction. It's deliberately drab, with the shaky camerawork and overall ugliness attempting to provide a "realistic" sensation, which seems awfully silly since every singer is backed up by an off-screen orchestra. It's a disastrous approach to the material.

Hooper has about three shots in his repertoire, so every scene begins with the camera swooping down from a great height and then clinging nervously to the performers who are forced to sing entire numbers in off-kilter close-ups. For no apparent reason, Hooper often films with several feet of headroom, calling your attention to the empty top of the frame. He occasionally alternates this approach with shots that cut the actors off at the eyebrows. The movie looks like it is improperly projected, and yet these were deliberate choices.

Much has been made of the fact that the cast was recorded singing live on set, as opposed to lip-syncing pre-recorded tracks, as is the norm with movie musicals. This has become a selling point and would be downright revolutionary, if we all decided to pretend that Peter Bogdanovich's At Long Last Love and James Brown's number in The Blues Brothers never existed. Hooper keeps the camera locked into a fisheye view of everybody's nostrils just to prove they're really singing, goddamnit. But maybe he should have reconsidered and realized that uncut tracks of Russell Crowe hoarsely flubbing notes are "authentic" in the worst way possible.

Crowe will probably be singled out as the whipping boy, if only because, like Pierce Brosnan in Mamma Mia, he often sounds like a farm animal in the midst of strangulation. But besides an honest-to-gawd, jaw-dropping turn from Anne Hathaway, who outclasses everyone and drops the mike a half hour into this thing, Les Misérables is just plain lousy filmmaking.

This movie is constricted, claustrophobic and all around unpleasant watch. When newcomer Samantha Barks does her best to win us over with the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. ✖✖✖

OUT OF THE WOODS

Erin McKeown extends her stream of consciousness to craft a smart, evocative new album.

Erin McKeown
plays the Brighton Music Hall on Jan. 17.

ERIN MCKEOWN'S PLUGGED in on a deeper level than many of her peers. She not only markets her music online but also lobbies policy makers to preserve a free and open Internet. She directs these activities from her rural cabin between Northampton and Becket.

"It's not like I don't have running water, but it's pretty rustic," McKeown says of her home, where she has webcast her "Cabin Fever" concert series since 2009. She usually sings in her living room with guests like Sonya Kitchell and Ryan Montbleau, although—speaking of running water—McKeown once broadcast from a stool in the river next to her yard, with guitar in hand and feet in the current. "It was such a stupid idea," she says, "and it was so fun."

The Skype-styled series began before the rise of Kickstarter or PledgeMusic as a sort of telethon to raise funds for her 2009 album, Hundreds of Lions. For her terrific Manifestra, out Jan. 15, McKeown turned to PledgeMusic, raising enough in money six days to pay for the album and more by offering packages like signed records, fantasy baseball consultations and house concerts.

"I have 600 [packages] to make, and that's far more than I ever expected," says McKeown, 35. "It's a good thing that the last job I had before being a musician was working in a warehouse for a music distributor, more than 15 years ago. So I know a thing or two about shipping."

The singer/songwriter knows something about recording as well, having made several albums that bridge folk and pop with gospel, electronica and swing jazz. "I've never thought what I did was folk music—maybe in the broad sense that I've always been part of a community of musicians," says McKeown, who majored in ethnomusicology at Brown University. "But a long time ago, I got past any desire to fight about it."

McKeown's genre-bending sound reaches maturity on Manifestra, poised to stand as one of the first great albums of 2013. It's her second self-produced effort, recorded with her usual touring musicians: drummer Marc Dalio and saxophonist Matt Douglas, as well as bassist/cellist Jeff Hill and keyboardist Erik Deutsch, who favors a Wurlitzer electric piano. McKeown plays a hollow-body electric guitar. A string trio arranged by violinist Joseph Brent also colors the moody, playful and provocative album.

"I used the exact same palette for this record, except that I turned up the distortion," says McKeown, who launches a U.S./U.K. tour at the Brighton Music Hall on Jan. 17. "Manifestra just has an edge and a snarl to the sounds more than the last record. I don't know why, except that's what my ears were hungry for."

The concept of change seeps into the album, as well as a search for truth, trust and justice. There's even a New Orleans–flavored cabaret tune called "That's Just What Happened." She says the first lines of the song "Manifestra" came to her in a dream, much the way the track's title popped into her head. "I never doubted it, like 'Do I mean manifesto?—no, it's a manifestra,'" McKeown says. "Opera's in there; manifesto's in there; and I love the word fenestra, which means window. There's a kind of opening in it for me."

McKeown increasingly opens up to politics in her even-toned voice. She targets immigration policy in "The Jailer." She seeks accountability on interconnected battlefields in "Baghdad to the Bayou," which she co-wrote with longtime friend and MSNBC host Rachel Maddow, who texted imagery from trips to Iraq and Louisiana. McKeown recalls being on Maddow's talk show after Hurricane Katrina as a personal turning point. "I remember leaving that session thinking, 'Man, I really want to be able to do this like her,'" she says. "I want to be able to articulate and have conversation and dialogue about this kind of stuff. It was a real motivator."

She has since stepped up her political activism, particularly on issues affecting musicians. McKeown has visited Capitol Hill, currently serves on the board of the Future of Music Coalition and just completed a year as a fellow at Harvard's Berkman Center for Internet & Society. "It's this concept of 'How do I get in the room where these discussions are?,'" says McKeown. "A free and open Internet allows me to craft this pretty unique form of expression." ×××

DROPPING THE BALL

A field guide to New Year's Eve parties

DEPENDING ON WHEN YOU read this, you're either gearing up for a New Year's Eve party or still recovering from one. Either way, you need advice, and possibly an IV.

People get very excited this time of year, because New Year's Eve has a lot going for it—imagery of a wizened old man metamorphosing into a sash-wearing baby, balls descending, cork injuries, the chance to sing the hottest hit of 1788, "Auld Lang Syne." Speaking of which, let's refresh ourselves on the lyrics: "Should old acquaintance be forgot, and rah rah arrghg rrahhh blaggghhh!" Repeat times seven.

As a veteran New Year's Eve partier, the most important advice I can give you is to pretend it's the eve of Columbus Day. Good ol' Columbus Eve—not much in the way of inflated expectations there, right? With no pressure to have the Best Night Ever, there's no disappointment when you merely have a good time with some friends. Cover charges are generally quite manageable, and you don't see miserable people wearing sunglasses indoors the morning of Columbus Day. But if you insist on celebrating NYE style, then you have six basic types of party from which to choose.

The House Party

A New Year's Eve house party should always be at someone else's house. Because New Year's Day mysteries can include, "Where did all the water go from the hot tub?" and "How do you get Champagne off a ceiling?" I attended one soiree where someone thought it would be funny to tuck toilet paper into a drunk guy's pants as he left the bathroom, so that when he walked around the house it unspooled like a breadcrumb trail. And indeed, that was very funny.

Normally, I'd say that after a big night you'd be wise to sleep in, but not after a New Year's Eve house party. You want to muster all your energy and escape at daybreak to some other lair, lest you find yourself spending the afternoon chiseling the mac 'n' cheese that got burned onto the pot at 3 am. Or mopping the ceiling.

The New York Public Spectacle

If you've ever been to Times Square for New Year's Eve, please tell me why it's fun. Because I've seen it on TV, and from my vantage point that whole production looks a lot like standing in the freezing cold with thousands of idiots waiting for a ball to slide down a pole while Seacrest mocks the rabble from on high. I'll admit I haven't seen the movie New Year's Eve, but I presume it's about New Yorkers bonding over a shared contempt for anyone who goes to Times Square.

The Off-Site Party

This is the party you throw at a house in Killington or possibly farther away, like Thailand. It's all exotic fun until the rude morning wakeup, which is complicated by the fact that you now have to hail a tuk-tuk and make it to the Phuket airport for a 9 am flight to Hong Kong. What were you thinking?

The Impossible Expectations Party

Your best friend's birthday is on Jan 1. And she's turning 30. And she just got a big promotion at work. And her boyfriend is going to propose at midnight. Basically, you need to lock her in a cage like a werewolf and not let her out until the conclusion of the NFL Divisional Playoffs.

The "Pretend It's Not New Year's Eve" Not-A-Party

Instructions: Go out for dinner and half-heartedly try to stay up until midnight, but if you don't make it, no big deal. Then the next morning, you'll be the bastard who's smugly walking his dog at 8 am, drinking coffee and saying, "I bet if we left now we could get in a half-day of skiing." If, on New Year's Day, you encounter friends who weren't so prudent, avoid broadcasting your cheerful optimism, or you may get stabbed with the celery stalk from a Bloody Mary.

The Bar Party

A bar party meets the most basic New Year's Eve requirement, in that it isn't at your house (unless you live in a bar, which is either sad or awesome). You've got to do your research, though. A few years ago, I ended up at a New Year's Eve party at a Miami club that had a $100 cover and an open bar. Good deal, perhaps?

It would've been, if there were more than two bartenders on duty to serve a thousand people. At one point I saw a guy try to bribe a bartender $100 just to serve him a drink. Soon after midnight, we all left to go run around on the beach and climb the lifeguard stations while cops shone spotlights on us. So maybe we did manage to get a few drinks. But not as many as we would've had on Columbus Eve. ×××

Soroff On ROB WILSON

The Price Is Right's only male spokesmodel tells us about breaking the glass ceiling.

IN SEPTEMBER, GRAFTON'S ROB WILSON, 25, MADE TELEVISION history by becoming the first male spokesmodel on TV's longest-running game show. Born in Framingham, Wilson has landed movie roles in Bride Wars, Surrogates, Friends with Benefits and The Social Network. On television, he has appeared on shows like The Secret Life of the American Teenager, The Middle, Supah Ninjas and Entourage. As a model for Ford, Wilson has been in numerous campaigns as well as music videos for Victoria Justice, Manika, Toni Braxton and David Guetta. He lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Is Bob Barker your patron saint?
Rob Wilson: No. Drew Carey is.

So you broke the glass ceiling in game shows. How does that feel?
It was just an awesome opportunity from the get-go. I like the idea of blazing a trail or leaving a legacy behind, and it's just amazing to be a part of such an iconic show.

When did you start watching The Price is Right*?*
Oh, God, as soon as I could open my eyes and recognize what a TV was. My grandmother helped raise me, and I used to be at her house every day from the age of four or five, sitting next to her and watching it.

Before you started on the show, did you have any idea how huge the gay following was?
I had no idea, but obviously if there's a male model competition, there's going to be a big gay fan base, and I think they really helped me.

So when are you going to start rocking a Speedo instead of the board shorts?
[Laughs.] I'm comfortable enough to do it, but for daytime TV, I don't think it's going to happen.

Have you gotten a lot of fan mail?
Absolutely. It's crazy what's happened, especially that whole first month. Some of it was cool fan mail from guys and girls. But there's some creepy stuff, too, for sure.

Like?
My theatrical agent called and said a collage had arrived. Every photo is of me without a shirt, or in a towel, or whatever, and the person wanted me to sign it, and send it back to him.

Do people recognize you on the street?
Yeah, a couple of times. Especially around here at the studio and in the gym. Guys always look at guys in the gym to compare themselves.

What's your routine at the gym?
I try to eat healthy and work out five times a week. I weight-train. I play basketball. I trained at a boxing gym here in Burbank. Oh, and a lot of sit-ups.

Have the other models helped you out?
Absolutely. They've been awesome! They kind of held my hand through the whole process and offered me tips.

Do you know the MSRP for a PT Cruiser?
No, I'm terrible at that. I'd lose most of the games, although I am starting to get better.

Which game is your favorite?
I'm pretty old school. I get excited when the Plinko comes out.

So Vanna White or Meredith Vieira?
Oh, I'm going to have to say Vanna because she's a legend. She made history on that show.

Have either Drew or the other models sexually harassed you?
[Laughs.] No. Everybody's cool.

Who makes more money on a typical show—the contestants or you?
There are people who walk away with a lot more than me, but mine is consistent.

Don't the contestants have to pay taxes on the prizes?
Y'know what? Yeah. That kind of bummed me out. This poor old lady won a car, a trip, 60 grand in stuff, and then she found out she had to pay taxes at home and here. But at the end of the day, they're happy; they've got a new car. It's a pretty good deal. I think most people keep the prizes.

Have the prizes gotten a lot nicer?
Without a doubt. As soon as Mike Richards took over they stopped giving away Band-Aid removers and started giving away Yves Saint Laurent and Gucci. It's pretty badass.

Do people expect you to be a complete himbo?
The cliché is that if you're a model, you're shallow and dumb. But after doing enough interviews, I think people see that there's more to me than just taking my shirt off.

Thing you miss the most about Boston?
Besides my family? Without question, Italian food.

Why do you think you won the male spokesmodel competition?
Maybe my personality, or maybe I had a little more modeling and acting experience, but I also had a badass crew in Boston voting for me.

Worst modeling experience?
I did a shoot for an online catalogue, and the photographer was foreign. When you do an underwear shoot, you put a sock-like thing over your package to eliminate any chance of your anatomy really showing. So I was doing that, and the guy was like, "No, no, Rob. It's Hollywood. Show your stuff!" I had to put up a bit of a battle, but it turned out OK.

Would you ever do full frontal nudity?
No. There's no need to.

Biggest lie on your acting resume?
I have a list of skills on there that are a little over the top. It makes me look like a triathlete. There's weird-ass stuff like pro kayaking.

Fantasy love scene partner?
Maybe Adriana Lima in her acting debut.

Actor who had you star-struck?
I guess my man Justin Timberlake when I did Friends with Benefits.

So have you gotten to spin the big wheel?
I did! And guess what? I got the dollar. ✖✖✖

GOOD THING in SMALL PACKAGES

For the founders of e-commerce cosmetics hit Birchbox, success isn't just a state of mind. It's 300,000+ subscribers.

BY NANCY GAINES

Photographed by Clay Patrick McBride

"IT'S HARD TO REMEMBER THAT TWO YEARS HAS BEEN ONLY TWO YEARS," says Hayley Barna, 29, co-founder of the cosmetics blockbuster, Birchbox. She and best friend, Katia Beauchamp, 30, launched the company in late 2010. Since then, their "insider access" to high-end beauty products grew from a notion in a New York bathroom to a Harvard Business School model to a multi-million dollar company.

The ladies still giggle like girls, but they command a white-hot venture. Birchbox has cornered the online, high-end beauty market with a simple but unique proposition: Women like to sample. (Men do, too, which is why Birchbox recently launched a masculine line.) For $10 a month, subscribers receive a box with four to five top-tier beauty products in sizes generous enough to last about a month.

Once the customer has sampled a sufficient range of products to generate a Birchbox profile, the goods are targeted to her, or him. In addition to the customized deliveries, Birchbox's "360 degree" marketing platform offers online tips, interactive services and sales on full-size merchandise. Some 40 percent of users have purchased full-size versions from the online shop, which is operated in partnership with more than 400 brands, many of them names like Kiehl's, Juicy Couture and Elizabeth Arden.

In the creation of this cosmetic success story, the eureka moment came, ingloriously, around February 2010, when Beauchamp was visiting her Harvard B-school classmate, Barna, at the apartment Barna shared with her best friend, Mollie Chen. Rifling through the medicine cabinet, Beauchamp came upon a hoard of beauty product samples. "Hayley was low-maintenance," says Beauchamp, a slender, long-haired brunette. "So I figured the samples had to be from Mollie," who worked as a senior assistant editor at Conde Nast Traveler. Chen became Birchbox's first hire and is now the editorial director.

"This is what every woman wants, I thought," says Beauchamp, "to have a beauty editor best friend." Before they graduated in May, Beauchamp and Barna (smaller and more sharply etched than Beauchamp, but with the same billowing locks) used their harvard.edu addresses to email brand executives for help, like the CEO of Gurwitch Products, which distributes Laura Mercier, and the CEO of Benefit Cosmetics. Within days, Benefit became the first company to sign on.

The rudiments of Birchbox, which now has 140 employees, were readied over the summer, with a September launch comprising "emailing everyone we know," says Beauchamp. "And once the first box shipped, we just talked and talked about it. We heard the voice of the consumer. We had a value proposition that cut through the clutter."

And they got course credit for it, too.

In October 2010, the company—which does not disclose sales figures—caught the eye of venture capitalists, garnering $1.4 million in seed money. It collected another $10.5 million in August 2011, according to the trade press. Where do the founders see it going? "Taking over the world," says Barna.

"There's so much more to be done," she adds. Maintaining subscriber growth, fulfilling the new men's line, building their international divisions. "I can see t-shirts and headphones," says Barna, listing one clear idea after another. The headphones, she explains, could be a sample set tucked in a men's box, along with other lifestyle or electronic goods. "Men like to discover, too," says Barna. The corporate name, in fact, was born to conjure gender neutrality, says Kelly Herman, senior manager. Both founders share credit for the idea.

In September, in a move that expanded its footprint into Western Europe and gobbled up its competition, Birchbox acquired Paris-based Joliebox (for an undisclosed sum). Joliebox is several months younger than Birchbox and shamelessly pitched itself as the "French equivalent." The younger startup acquired mirror service Boudoir Privé from the United Kingdom in December 2011, and Glamourum from Spain in February 2012.

> "This is what every woman wants, I thought. To have a beauty editor best friend."

"There's no shortage of ambition around here," says Barna, who grew up shoulder-to-shoulder with enterprise in Armonk, N.Y., the headquarters of IBM. Her parents ran a family business, manufacturing light fixtures, and Barna majored in economics and psychology as an undergraduate at Harvard, concentrating on behavioral economics and how people make decisions with money. She worked with Bain & Company, Christie's and Amazon before heading to B-school, where, on the first day, she met Beauchamp. They clicked. "We sat catty corner to each other, and I checked out her nail polish," recalls Barna. "From there, it was an organic process." Beauchamp, who hails from Texas, spent Thanksgiving 2009 at Barna's house, where the germ of an online subscription business began to grow.

"I wanted to work on something more entrepreneurial," says Barna, "but I wasn't set on going out on my own." Beauchamp grew up in El Paso and graduated from Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. ("my first experience on the East Coast") with a degree in international studies and economics. Before Harvard, she worked in finance and commercial real estate. Birchbox presented the opportunity to parlay two of her favorite things: beauty and deals.

Beauchamp has been married for two years to Greg Beauchamp, whom she's known since elementary school; Barna lives with her boyfriend of two years, Fredrik Maro, a Norwegian entrepreneur. "We're definitely better friends now than when we started," says Barna. "It's like we're married, with 140 kids." Carving out separate niches—Beauchamp works more with the brand partners, Barna stays on the strategic side—they keep up the complement. "We're very lucky to be totally aligned in the business," says Barna. "We have different viewpoints but logic prevails." Their closeness extends to private time. "We don't see much of each other during the day," she continues. "Katia's out a lot, and I'm in meetings. We do get together on weekends. Last weekend I helped trim her [Christmas] tree, and we played a video game."

Right now, the ladies are focused on building the men's line with partners like the highly successful upscale grooming company, Jack Black. "It's for a guy who's looking to take things up a notch," says Barna, whose older brother works for Birchbox, too. "It's not about just the look, but knowing the details matter. He could be sporty, urban; Birchbox will match his personality."

The model, as Barna says, is "not a demographic, it's a state of mind." ×××

BY THE IMPROPER STAFF

GINGER MASSAGE

WHEN IT'S IN A SMALL STACK NEXT TO YOUR CALIFORNIA ROLL, GINGER DOESN'T EXACTLY LOOK LIKE AN INGREDIENT YOU'D WANT TO RUB ALL OVER YOUR BODY.

No. 1

BLISS SPA'S GINGER RUB, HOWEVER, USES FRESH GINGER AND FOIL IN A MASSAGE that doesn't look like takeout lunch. Dollops of the spice, which are grinded in a food processor and mixed with essential oils like lavender, peppermint and lemon, are kneaded into the skin as a method of detoxification. And just in case that sushi is hard to stomach, the root is brushed clockwise on the abdomen to aid the digestive system.

The rub saturates the skin during a 20-minute foil wrap, followed by a soak and body butter massage after the plant, and its healing properties, has had time to absorb. It's a treatment especially beneficial in the winter, as ginger stimulates the body's circulation and keeps the extremities, like hands and feet, warm, according to Bliss' lead technician, Dawn Lamonica. Along with being nature's mittens, ginger regulates the respiratory system, eases muscle pain and decreases inflammation. It may even induce some chopstick-related cravings.

EAR SEEDS

WHETHER YOU'RE STAVING OFF CIGARETTES OR SUGAR, TREATING BACK PAIN OR MIGRAINES, BOOSTING YOUR LIBIDO OR EGG COUNT, LICENSED ACUPUNCTURIST MELISSA WINTTURI SAYS THAT THERE'S A POINT—AND A NEEDLE—FOR THAT.

WITH ROOTS IN CHINA, WHERE HEALERS DEVELOPED THE SKIN-PRICKING practice to correct imbalances in qi, or energy flow, acupuncture wasn't popularized in the States until Nixon's famous trip in 1972. Then, the Watergates—ahem, floodgates—opened. "It can be used to treat just about anything, really," says Wintturi, who owns Charles River Acupuncture in Inman Square. "It's really calming to the nervous system."

Some 15 years before Nixon's voyage, however, French physician Paul Nogier tweaked the traditional methods, using the ear as a point of focus. With more than 100 points on the organ, the ear links to every part of the body. "The main theory is that those points stimulate the nerves," Wintturi says. In turn, those nerves affect the targeted area—say, the spleen, for an increase in energy. "After the treatment, I'll send [clients] home with the press balls, so they can continue the treatment on their own," she says. These press balls—alternatively called an ear seeds or magnets—are small rounded pieces of stainless steel that are applied to various points on the ear with adhesive after acupuncture. Because frequency is vital to the success of the treatment, these ear seeds act as acupuncture on the go between sessions. "It's like going to the gym," says Wintturi, "The more frequently you do it, the faster you'll see results."

West Bridge, 1 Kendall Square, Building 300, Cambridge

AT LEAST NOT FOR WEST BRIDGE CHEF/CO-OWNER MATT Gaudet, an advocate of vegetable-based sauces since working with culinary pioneer Jean-Georges Vongerichten over a decade ago in New York. While animal fats and proteins still take center stage on many New American menus, Gaudet is converting diners to the vegetal pleasures of a less gut-busting, more environmentally friendly diet. "Protein," he claims, "is better suited as a garnish. It's not 100 percent sustainable."

Instead of the traditional veal stock and butter, Gaudet uses sweet potatoes as a thickening agent to make a demi-glace for a dish of pork and sweet-potato jus. "It's not as rich, and vegetables make a brighter sauce," he says. Besides flavor and health improvements, substituting vegetables for fat also has West Bridge's diners feeling less full and thereby more likely to try more dishes at the Kendall Square eatery, which encourages tapas-style ordering. Other chefs trending away from Escoffier toward escarole include Rendezvous chef/owner Steve Johnson, Bondir chef/owner Jason Bond and Beacon Hill Bistro executive chef Josh Lewin, whose seasonal green sauces comprise ramps and green garlic in the spring and the tops of radishes, turnips and other root vegetables in the winter.

BODY WEIGHT TRAINING

BODY WEIGHT TRAINING, WHICH THE AMERICAN COLLEGE OF Sports Medicine declared as one of the dominant exercise fads in 2013, uses one's own mass as a resistance tool, just like how those Greek warriors, and a shirtless Gerard Butler in 300, prepared for the battlefield back in the B.C. days.

Body weight workouts, like push-ups, crunches, squats, lunges, pull-ups and certain yoga positions, don't require any equipment besides limbs. "If you're looking to workout and don't have a lot of money to spend, it's certainly a viable option," says Mike D'Angelo, an exercise physiologist and an ESPN MuscleMania Pro. Even though there isn't any fancy machinery to master, D'Angelo still recommends finding a trainer for those whose joints might need warming up. "Jumping and ballistic movements spell disaster for most de-conditioned folks… Weekend warriors are sure to get injured." When executed properly, this retro routine builds strength, endurance and muscle tone. Plus, you'll be ready for any invading hordes that come your way.

BARRE WORKOUTS

THERE'S A REASON BALLERINAS HAVE SUCH LONG LEAN BODIES.

THOSE REPETITIVE MICRO-MOVEMENTS AT THE BARRE stretch and strengthen muscles, yielding strength without bulk. Fitness fanatics are taking notice, as barre studios are sprouting like mushrooms around town. Exhale Spa, the forerunner to the recent crop, specializes in Core Fusion classes, which combine elements of barre work with yoga movements to target core muscles. Caitlin Milbury, mind/body manager at Exhale's Battery Wharf location, was a distance runner before she discovered the challenging workout.

Unlike in running or other cardio classes, Milbury claims that "you don't plateau because the intensity is always there." She adds, "You can always stay in the position lower or hold it longer." Many of Exhale's teachers and staff were drop-ins who became obsessed with the dramatic ways the simple movements reshaped and transformed their bodies. Instructors guide you through the positions and make adjustments to stretches that make even marathoners' muscles quiver in pain. The best part of a workout at Exhale's Battery Wharf location, though, is the complimentary use of its Turkish hammam, where you can recover from your Black Swan torture in the room's mix of humidity and dry heat.

LIFE COACHING

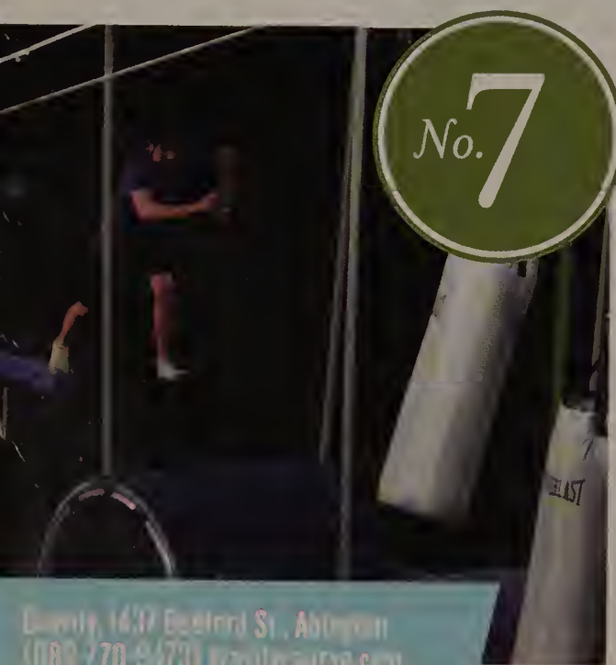
THERE ARE A LOT OF PURPORTED FIXES TO THE PANDORA'S BOX OF RELATIONSHIP TROUBLES AND ADDICTIONS, OF BALLOONING WAISTBANDS AND SKITTISH CEREBRUMS.

BUT BETWEEN THE THERAPIST'S PRESCRIPTION PAD AND THE MOTIVATIONAL speaker's podium, there's a middle ground occupied by the life coach. Coaching is largely what it sounds like: It's having a strategist who keeps your goals in view and helps you make the right moves to get there. If applied to problem like, say, a festering work project, it's like behavioral Semtex, capable of clearing away the mental blockages between desire and achievement.

"We hold a mirror up to a client," says Aida Bielkus of Health Yoga Life, a Boston yoga studio that offers coaching as well as daily yoga classes. "Our job is to remind our clients that they have the greatness within themselves to heal, to be whole." Specifically, this means an hour-long phone session in which the coach asks about the client's most recent gust of negativity, then follows its roots to the origin of the problem. "Our proprietary method shifts people from reactivity to responsibility, where one has the choice to create change," says Bielkus.



Lest your nostrils wrinkle at the scent of pop psychology, coaching's effects are tangible. "Our clients say over and over again that one session has done more for them than anything," says Bielkus. "It's for people who are looking to improve their lives, who want to go from just functioning to living to their fullest potential." ANDREW RIMAS

EVERYONE'S WATCHED JAPANESE GAME SHOWS AND SEEN THE CONTESTANTS take a padded beam to their lower lumbars before toppling, wincingly, onto their faces. And many of us think, "Looks like fun!"

Enter Gravity, the Wipeout-inspired obstacle course that opened in Abington in November. Designed by gymnastics and structural engineers, the gauntlet is great for building endurance, inspiring confidence and bruising egos/muscle tissue. Whether you take a $12 turn or go a full hour for $20, owner Patrick Tarmey has some fitness/survival tips.

Don't stop moving. Not on the hanging barrels. Not on the rope swing. Maybe after you tumble backwards off the balance beam.

Keep your balance. Difficult on the trampoline. Harder once you're walloped with a swinging heavy bag.

Don't land on your feet. Perhaps the most challenging segment of the course is a lineup of three giant rubber balls acting as both landing and launching pads. "If you land on your feet, you're not making it anywhere but the mat," warns Tarmey. "You'll just fly off." NICK ALTSCHULLER

HEALTHFUL APPS

PURCHASING NEW GEAR IS A GREAT WAY TO INSPIRE EVEN THE LAZIEST EXERCISER.

YET, LIKE THE POST-NEW YEAR'S CROWD AT YOUR LOCAL HEALTH CLUB, MOTIVATION quickly dwindles. (Ask anyone still making monthly payments on a dusty Bowflex.) With a smartphone however, the newest toy is just a download away.

They're plentiful, cheap or, in some cases, free. Take RunKeeper, which uses your phone's GPS to map your route and track your time, pace and calories burned. But why simply measure your misery when you can make a game of it? Like The Walking Dead with pedometers, Zombies, Run! ($8) incorporates dozens of missions into your afternoon jogs, and mixes voice recordings and radio messages into your favorite playlist. Leave the house a wheezing loafer; return a conquering hero.

While dodging the undead, you'll want to check your pulse. Instant Heart Rate (free) operates using your phone's flashlight and camera. Cover the area with your finger, and you've got a reading in about 15-20 seconds. For a more magical result, try Cardiio ($3), which finds your pulse by measuring how light bounces off your face. It's quick and easy, and since it doesn't require sweaty clenching, there's less risk of your phone bouncing off the pavement.

UPGRADED KITCHEN GADGETS

HEALTH-BY-CONVENIENCE TOPS THE TRENDING CHARTS THIS YEAR. HERE ARE A FEW GREAT GADGETS THAT MAKE HEALTHY HOME-COOKED MEALS AS EASY AS SPINACH PIE:

No. 9

THE VITAMIX 5200 Hardly just a blender, this kitchen companion is designed to create an entire meal. Blend skinny margaritas to start, a soup (made hot while mixing) for the first course, butternut squash casserole for the main, and finish it off with fruit sorbet. With a quick, self-cleaning swish between courses, your tummy will be full and your dishwasher empty. $449 at vitamix.com

WILLIAMS-SONOMA ALL-CLAD PERFORATED MULTIPORT WITH STEAMER BASKET, 12-QUART The steamer doubles as a strainer, saving you the sometimes painful pour when draining quinoa spaghetti. The setup is ideal, too, for steaming logs of seitan, a meat substitute that can be costly at the salad bar but sets you back cents to prepare at home. $179.95 at Williams-Sonoma, Copley Place, Boston (617-262-3080) williams-sonoma.com

MOOD TEXTING

NOW YOU CAN DRUNK-TEXT an entire city. Sort of. The coldest and darkest of nights demand more than the glow of skyscrapers. Enter Winter Lights, an innovative art series on the Greenway that casts mesmerizing displays of illumination, creating an urban aurora borealis. Next up is Color Commons, an interactive, temporary installation by New American Public Art that uses the Light Blades at the Rings Fountain. This month NAPA releases a phone number that's synced to the blades. Park-goers text a color to the number and then watch the Light Blades fade to that shade. Join the show on Jan. 10, either on the Rose Kennedy Greenway or from a completely different area code.

AMANDA FURRER

Color Commons takes place on Jan. 10, 6 p.m. at the Rings Fountain, Rose Kennedy Greenway, Boston. rosekennedygreenway.org.

Stand-up and Deliver

Bench Player Newton-raised Louis C.K. has come a long way since his early days performing in Boston before unimpressed Chinese restaurant patrons. The three-time Emmy Award–winning comedian, creator of the FX series Louie and writer/director of the satirical blaxploitation classic Pootie Tang is currently touring to sold-out crowds. Fans appreciate his brutal, insightful honesty; whether making jokes about his children or race in America, there isn't anything he's afraid to talk about. See for yourself when he performs at Symphony Hall Jan. 3–5.

Born Killers

Psycho Therapy

Horror films with murderous children running amuck are a dime a dozen, but when one's directed by David Cronenberg, you know it's not your run-of-the-mill slasher flick. Before Eastern Promises and Cosmopolis, Cronenberg helmed this grisly 1979 flick, The Brood. While undergoing mysterious "psychoplasmic" experiments, a woman's mind springs forth a batch of homicidal kiddies. As he investigates her treatment, the patient's husband has to deal with their special brand of temper tantrums. Set your biological clock back at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Jan. 4-5.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Central Park Five ★★ ½ Ravaged by the crack epidemic, New York City in the late 1980s was a powder keg of racial unrest. Anyone around at the time will remember the case of a female jogger, savagely raped and beaten within an inch of her life in Central Park, and the five black and Latino teenagers convicted of the heinous crime. Fewer folks know that these boys were innocent. A serial rapist stepped forward and confessed in 2002, after the convicted had already served lengthy prison terms. PBS mainstay Ken Burns, codirecting with his daughter and his son-in-law, is an unlikely choice for such incendiary material, and the film feels weirdly muted regarding this gross miscarriage of justice. It's a polite, empathetic movie that contains a lot of valuable information but little anger. The crooked cops, overzealous prosecutors and reckless media sensationalists all get off easy, as the movie's focus is on sadness and not rage. I wish Spike Lee had directed it instead. (At Kendall Square.)

Cloud Atlas ★★ ½ Some people call it the best movie of the year; others say it's the worst. The truth is that Cloud Atlas feels like both at the same time. Directed by Wachowski siblings Lana and Andy, splitting duties with Run Lola Run's Tom Tykwer, this insanely ambitious film explodes David Mitchell's carefully constructed nesting-doll stories into a single, centuries-spanning continuum where past, present and future overlap, as do recurring themes of enslavement and escape. Tom Hanks and the rest of the all-star cast keep popping-up, playing different (but sometimes oddly similar) characters in each disparate tale, often wearing elaborate prosthetic makeup that ranges from the sublime to the ridiculous—a turn of phrase that sums up Cloud Atlas in a nutshell. A lot of the time, this feels like D.W. Griffith's Intolerance by way of Zardoz. Yet the kitsch factor weirdly keeps with the picture's ardent, disarming sincerity. There's not a cynical moment in these three hours, and the actors throw themselves into their roles with wild, foolhardy abandon. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villian. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Flight ★★ The trouble with movies about addiction is that they all tend to be the same. There are only so many ways to run through the standard parabola of denial, rock-bottom, relapse and recovery before it starts to feel like déjà vu all over again. Denzel Washington stars as a hotshot pilot for a regional Georgia airline who responds to a fluke mechanical failure by inverting the plane in a daredevil move and saving the lives of almost a hundred passengers. Only catch is that he was smashed. It's a tremendous scene, but unfortunately the rest of this picture's bloated 139-minute running time follows Washington at his father's farmhouse, attempting to kick booze and drugs before a federal hearing that could land him in prison. He climbs on the wagon; he falls off the wagon. He climbs on the wagon again and then guess what happens next? He self-destructs over and over until it's eventually time for everybody to recite "The Serenity Prayer," so the movie can finally end. Rinse, wash and repeat. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Guilt Trip ★★ Far and away the mildest film in theaters right now, Anne Fletcher's love letter to nagging Jewish mothers boasts a surprisingly layered performance from Barbra Streisand but little else. It's a 90-minute wisp of a road trip starring Seth Rogen as a bumbling chemist who invented an environmentally sustainable cleaning solution. Since the movie takes place in an alternate universe where nobody uses the Internet, he has to drive cross-country pitching his product to skeptical distributors. For reasons that don't make much sense, he brings along his doting mother (Streisand) who embarrasses him at every turn. Toned way down from Fockers territory, Streisand plays a lonely widow who lives through her son and beams with pride at his remarkable underachievements. She's got a coupon for everything and can't stop fixing his hair or straightening his tie. Fletcher, who previously helmed The Proposal and 27 Dresses, keeps the filmmaking as unremarkable as possible. The Guilt Trip is pleasant, which will probably be enough for its target audience. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Hitchcock ★ ½ Stupid and insulting, director Sasha Gervasi's cartoonish look behind the scenes at the making of Psycho casts Anthony Hopkins as the master of suspense, burying the actor beneath several tons of gooey prosthetic makeup and a ridiculous fat suit. It's like watching someone try to act with their head wrapped in silly putty. Not that it matters much, as Gervasi and screenwriter John J. McLaughlin can't be bothered to even feign interest in the actual nuts and bolts of Hitchcock's craft. They instead opt for a silly, tabloid farce that depicts the director as a creepy peeping tom living out his murderous sexual fantasies through imaginary conversations with serial killer Ed Gein (Michael Wincott.) Hitch gets it in his head that his wife Alma (Helen Mirren) is cheating on him with Danny Houston's pompous windbag, and the ensuing tiresome dysfunction comes complete with groaningly obvious inside jokes for movie buffs every five minutes or so. I'd rather be watching Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, and when was the last time anybody said that? (At Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Hyde Park On Hudson ★★ Following the soggy playbook of last year's equally dismissible My Week with Marilyn, director Roger Michell's Hyde Park on Hudson supposedly chronicles the momentous first meeting of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Britain's King George VI, but all that's just background noise. Really, the movie is about how FDR's dowdy distant cousin, Daisy Suckley (Laura Linney), had a schoolgirl crush on the commander-in-chief. In an improbable bit of casting, Bill Murray plays FDR. He's canny enough to understand that we're never going to forget we're watching Bill Murray, so he doesn't try an impersonation and just keeps his chin tilted up while slightly affecting an accent. It's a pretty good performance with a fair amount of mystery preserved behind his smiling eyes. But alas, we're soon back to Daisy's sappy romantic woes, and the none-too-shocking revelation that's she's not the only lucky lady to get up-close-and-personal with the president. Taking great pains to remain inoffensive, Hyde Park wears its slightness on its sleeve. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Jack Reacher ★★★ Working from One Shot, the ninth novel in Lee Child's inexhaustible but readable series, writer/director Christopher McQuarrie sticks a never droller Tom Cruise in the convoluted case of a Pittsburgh sniper who may or may not have been framed. As typical of Child's tales, the title character meticulously pores over the evidence with an almost Asberger-ish focus, openly insulting the local authorities while periodically mopping the floor with folks dumb enough to start bare-knuckle brawls. There's a pulpy zing to the dialogue, with some serious belly laughs arising from Reacher's blasé understatements and lightning quick displays of superhuman strength. It could all easily seem like a silly exercise in movie star ego gratification if Cruise and McQuarrie didn't approach the material with just the right touch of humor. Jack Reacher is a deliberately lo-fi, old-school detective yarn that at its best feels like a really good episode of a '70s television show. That's fine with me. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Killing Them Softly ★★★ ½ Shot in New Orleans, Andrew Dominik's noir transplants George V. Higgins' Boston-based 1974 novel, Cogan's Trade, to a decimated, unnamed urban wasteland during the 2008 economic collapse. It's a deliberately small-potatoes tale of two numbskull grifters (Scoot McNairy and Ben Mendelsohn) stupid enough to knock over a poker game run by Ray Liotta's luckless mob flunky. Brad Pitt plays the out-of-town muscle brought in to clean up this mess, constantly haggling with a buttoned-up middleman (Richard Jenkins) who only wants to pay "recession rates." The majority of the movie consists of long-winded, profane conversations between lowlifes, with lofty campaign rhetoric from McCain and Obama droning on in the background. Dominik hits the political points with a sledgehammer, but the obviousness is a small price to pay for hearing Higgins' peerless dialogue performed by a magnificently scuzzy cast. In only two scenes, James Gandolfini nearly runs away with the picture as a repulsive hitman lost in a haze of hookers and booze. It's pungent and often mercilessly funny. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicity recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Pitch Perfect ★★ ½ If the bizarre spectacle of Anna Kendrick belting out "No Diggity" in a West Side Story–style sing-off doesn't tickle your absurdity sensors, you'll probably be in for a very long evening. A silly Bring It On knockoff set in the brutal, cutthroat world of collegiate a cappella singing, this high-energy mess of a movie makes up for what it lacks in basic competence with goofball exuberance. Kendrick, the ever-reliable supporting player whose incongruously sharp features clash with her big round eyes, steps up to the lead with a dysfunctional gang of female song-stresses. No points for guessing that Kendrick's irreverent ideas are just what these gals need to shake up the entire a cappella scene, slyly commenting on the plot's tired familiarity by uttering clichés with an air of self-mockery. Working from Mickey Rapkin's nonfiction book, 30 Rock writer Kay Cannon undercuts the dull beats with throw-away one-liners and surreal non-sequiturs that will feel familiar to fans of Tina Fey's TV program. (In the suburbs.)

Promised Land ★★ Matt Damon is such an effortlessly compelling, low-key screen presence, I'd follow him anywhere. That includes this picture, despite Promised Land being a disappointing, painfully earnest, social issues melodrama. In a tale penned by the star and fellow Boston native John Krasinski, Damon and the invaluable Frances McDormand play representatives of a multinational natural gas conglomerate who arrive in a deliberately unnamed farm town attempting to lease the land for fracking purposes. Krasinski is the backwards-baseball-cap-and-cargo-shorts wearing environmentalist who teams up with Hal Holbrook's community leader for a lot of long-winded lectures. Director Gus Van Sant does his best to shade these proceedings with an admirable appreciation for everyday life, and it's a testament to his casual mastery that the movie ever feels like anything more than a glorified PowerPoint presentation. Our loyalties are instantly lopsided, as Damon is a born movie star while John Krasinski is a tall geeky guy from television. I spent the entire time rooting for the bad guy. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel Silver Linings Playbook into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of "edginess." It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her police officer husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Taken 2 ★★½ Second verse, same as the first. In this do-over of 2009's abjectly ludicrous divorced dad fantasy, Liam Neeson repeats his starring role as a retired CIA agent "with a certain set of skills." But it turns out all those Albanians he spent the previous movie cold-bloodedly executing had families of their own, and are looking for revenge in this ridiculous exercise directed by the hilariously named Olivier Megaton. The gag, as it was before, is seeing an actor with Neeson's dramatic chops going through the motions of a direct-to-video Jean-Claude Van Damme picture. He brings gravity to stupidity, and there are few movies stupider than Taken 2. There's this whole bit of business where his daughter has to find him on a map using grenades, and the scene goes on for so absurdly long you can be sure everyone involved was wallowing in the foolishness. It's dopey, short and awkwardly edited around the violence for a PG-13 rating. I still had a blast. (In the suburbs.)

This Is 40 ★★ Clearly aspiring to be the John Cassavetes of penis jokes, writer/director Judd Apatow turns inward for This Is 40, a semi-autobiographical sprawl with some honest moments strewn about the shapeless bickering. Paul Rudd and Leslie Mann reprise their roles as the devoted but dissatisfied married couple who stole Apatow's 2007 surprise smash Knocked Up. It's probably not the savviest move at this moment in the zeitgeist to try and elicit sympathy for wealthy folks living beyond their means. (Let's just say that Apatow's idea of financial distress is a good deal comfier than my own experience.) The meandering first hour and a half of this absurdly overlong movie successfully depicts the day-to-day grind of family life, unflinchingly chronicling all the temper tantrums, petty slights and lack of privacy that come with any prolonged cohabitation. The rougher parts are salvaged only by a sublime turn from Albert Brooks. Apatow's honesty is commendable, but after 134 minutes you'll wish he'd kept some things to himself. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn Part 2 ★★½ It's been five movies since the winsome, almost unwatchable Twilight, in which Kristen Stewart's Bella pouted through high school being adored by Robert Pattinson's sparkly vampire Edward, and the series has grown from mopey adolescent wish-fulfillment to full on gonzo camp. Even the fans don't seem to take it seriously anymore, and lucky for us neither does director Bill Condon, who plays the absurd final chapter for maximum silliness. The central love triangle is finally resolved now that werewolf Jacob has fallen in love (or imprinted) Bella and Edward's half-breed baby, the unfortunately named Renesmee. The preening glam rock stars from the vampire Vatican, led by a cackling Michael Sheen and the awesome Dakota Fanning are en route to claim the child, and most of the movie is everybody standing around explaining their superpowers. But all the endless droning pays off in such a spectacularly goofy, over-the-top showdown I damn near fell out of my chair laughing. Add a star if you're drunk. Subtract one if sober. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Warm Welcome

Service With a Smile

Hospitality is done hosting living-room shows. After taking their act to the crowds of SXSW and on a national tour, the group finds its self-titled debut among Rolling Stone's top albums of 2012. Upbeat tunes paired with cynical lyrics make for a soundtrack fit for any 20-something's trials and tribulations. From singing about bicoastal break-ups to the daydreams of the underemployed, the band and its sound commiserate with those still figuring out what to do with an expensive liberal arts degree. Welcome these Brooklynites to Great Scott on Jan. 8.

Made of Mettle

Originally intending to create two replicas of cranes, artist Xu Bing instead pulled debris from China's urban landscape to create fictional fowl for Phoenix. After brief appearances outside museums in Beijing and Shanghai, the mythological monstrosities now dangle inside Building 5 at the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, dwarfing guests with industrial grandeur. While their plumes won't set anything ablaze, the thousands of internal LED lights might have you reaching for your shades. Check out the fabricated feathers at Mass MoCA through October.

We salute Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

Roasted Monkfish with Grilled & Roasted Eggplant, Tomato, Capers and Olive Oil at Bistro du Midi

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

Beer Specialty

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Something's always brewing at Best of Boston's award winning beer bar. ## Chew on This

A dinner party of do-gooders doesn't begin to do justice to the annual blowout that is the Food for Thought Dinner to benefit the Grow Clinic at Boston Medical Center. Held at the Mandarin Oriental, the fund-raiser ensures the clinic's motto of "exceptional care, without exception." The über-elegant evening began with cocktails and continued with a superb dinner and a short but sweet speaking program that never failed to tug at the heartstrings.

Front and center: fitness model Tom Potter and his adoring husband, Dan Mathieu, broker to the stars Michael Winter with his beautiful balabusta Deb Goldberg, the stunning mother/daughter duo of Joan and Amy Belkin with mack daddy Steve, newlyweds Wes and Ashley Karger and his twin, Paul (sans fiancée Pamela Vargas), banking bigshot Jeff Swartz, the delectable Randi Cutler and her adoring other half, Joel, stunning brunette Amy Fisher, the ethereal Mary Wolfson, yummy mummies Joan Rosenberg, Rachael Goldfarb and Wendy Pierce, the soignée Susan Schechter and her handsome other half, Bob, and one woman who said, "I just got back from Myanmar."

When a friend asked if she'd bought any rubies, she answered, "No. But I did buy a bracelet made out of watermelon seeds."

The centerpieces, meanwhile, were made from produce that will help stock the BMC's Preventive Food Pantry, and best of all, emcee Heather Unruh promised to have everyone home in time for the 11 o'clock news, given that she had to anchor it.

The evening's funniest exchange:

"You went to Cambridge Culinary School?"

"Only for one day."

"Then I'm only coming over for one dinner."

Who You Callin' a Sugar Plum Fairy?

It was pretty much nonstop applause from the moment the curtain went up on Opening Night of Boston Ballet's brand spanking new Nutcracker at the Opera House. One of Boston's most beloved holiday traditions got a $3 million makeover and you could see every penny, from the jaw-dropping sets to the gem-encrusted costumes.

There to take it all in were such arts patrons and balletomanes as artistic director Mikko Nissinen and his band of merry elves (Charles Heightchew, Liz Olds, Anthony Randazzo and Shannon Parsley, to name a few), brunette bombshell Eve Rounds and her handsome husband, Jonathan, tall drink of water John Osbon and the magnificent Andrea, delectable tongue twister Pixley Schiciano and her husband, Ken, the super-suave Cedric Tonello with the delightful Tanh, party pair Stephanie Schonmetzler Loeber and the dashing Greg, Bond girl Tatiana Webb, the ubiquitous Doris Yaffe, and pretty much everybody who's anybody, including one man who said, "The Nutcracker is really the most convoluted story ever. E.T.A. Hoffman must've been smoking the good s."

Randi Cutler and Amy Fisher at the Food for Thought Dinner

Tatiana Webb and Eve Rounds at The Nutcracker Opening Night party

Andrea and John Osbon at The Nutcracker Opening Night party

Conrado Bondoc and Kim Snell at the Ally Institute Grand Gala

Grayson Moore, Janet Wu and Alec Stern at the Ally Institute Grand Gala

Bill Deacon and Sarina Poel at the Ally Institute Grand Gala

Following the performance, a raucous party was held at The Ritz-Carlton, where guests rubbed elbows (and who knows what other body parts) with members of the company, while toasting the rousing success.

Overheard by the bar: one of the dancers joking about her costume: "It's 3,000 Swarovski crystals so it weighs a ton, but you don't have to wear underwear."

Chicken Cutlets Need Not Apply

The party people and the preppy set were out in full force for the Grand Gala at the Boston Harbor Hotel's Wharf Room.

A fund-raiser for the newly formed Ally Institute at Rand (named after Alexandra Zapp and aimed at preventing sexual violence), the party attracted the likes of the naturally carbonated Connie Brown, attorney-at-large Caesar Belbel, the babe-a-licious Mary Chiochios, yachtsman Gregg Nourjian, all-around connoisseur Conrado Bondoc squiring the alarmingly beautiful Kim Snell, North Shore bootlegger Nelse Clark, the hale and hearty John Smiroldo with his gorgeous bride, Susane, incorrigible scamp Bill Deacon with the smoking hot Sarina Poel, custom clothier to the stars Alan Rouleau, Cheers gajillionaire Tom Kershaw, broadcasting bigmouth Jim Braude and his partner in crime Margery Eagan, and so on and so forth down the list of Boston's biggest scenesters.

The buffet and silent auctions were amazing, the bartenders were wonderfully attentive, and the speeches were mercifully brief.

Meanwhile, it was a toss-up for the most amusing remark, between the woman who said, "If I pass out, just take off my Spanx, and the circulation should come back," and another woman who responded to a compliment on her dress by saying, "It's pink, and yes, my breasts are real." ×××

Man vs. Relativity

There's a compulsion in some men's magazines—periodically, when the editors feel especially drunk on Cormac McCarthy novels—to define the modern man. "A man makes things." "A man knows what time it is by looking at the sun." "A man uses short, declarative sentences." "A man never wears a white summer dress with colored panties." It's a silly thing to do, to tell men what manhood means. You might as well grasp at an unmoored strand of chest hair as try to encapsulate 50.2 percent of the world's population in a quip. I wouldn't even venture to say, "A man has a penis." There're university gender studies departments that've bet their publishing lists on the contrary.

Adam DeTour

On definitions, let the deodorant marketers fret. A man is really just a knot of contradictions and fears, of kindnesses and courage, at moments standing indomitable and at others sitting sapped in the flickery gloom of basic cable. He is the quintessence of dust. He is, merely, human. But if you need some sort of rule, let's just say a man is someone who can hang out alone in a bar without necessarily getting propositioned. And we think we can parallel park.

It makes more sense for non-men to define us, which is why we asked lady experts to tell guys how to do absolutely everything. Also, we rounded up new menswear ideas and distilled everything there is to know about American whiskies.

ABOUT FACE

SIZE MATTERS. FOR THE BOSTON BEARD BUREAU, A BEARD AND mustache "team" whose well-conditioned strands have won both regional and national awards, girth is the game. Judges at their competitions look for thickness, length and texture from these flawlessly follicled competitors, who use ample amounts of shampoo, conditioner, argon oil, wax and hairspray to cultivate their bristles. "The basic rule is that a healthy body will grow healthy hair, but that's not to say you can't drink a few beers here and there," says Bert Mayer, founder and president of the group. Since April 2011, the BBB has sculpted their tendrils into shapes like brass knuckles, Mickey Mouse ears and bottle caps for the freestyle categories. They've even acquired their own set of groupies, the Whiskerinas, who don their own fake facial hair. "If you have facial hair, you're winning the competition of life."

Gnash and Burn

It's popcorn chicken from hell. Popeye's on fire. However you know it, Sichuan Garden's ChongQing dry chicken (listed on their special laminated menu) is the stuff of spicy food addictions. The Brookline Village kitchen does a top-notch batter-and-fry job, which is key to the nuggets' craggy texture. And the crumbly, delicate coating of chilies, garlic, sugar and scallions delivers a roasted, faintly sweet complexity. Get a takeout container for the extra bits; they're great for spicing up the leftovers of any cuisine.

APPLES OF TEMPTATION

When she lived in California, Judith Maloney made wine because there were grapes. Since moving to Colrain in the early '70s, she's made hard cider because the hilly Berkshires town is "an apple zone." With West County Cider, the hobby-turned-business she started with her late husband (and now runs with her son), Maloney digs deeper into the local apple tradition than most cider producers. She cultivates and ferments tiny batches of single heirloom varietals, among them Redfields and French Calville Blancs. Pop the cork on a chilled bottle of Roxbury Russet for a clean, food-friendly taste of the state.

DROOLISH BEHAVIOR

TO THE WOMAN WHO FELL ASLEEP ON the Red Line: Your head was nodding, and I knew what was coming next. Had we been on a long-distance flight, I'd have gently woken you up, considering I generally don't let strangers cozy up that close to me. But that morning you seemed like you could've used an extra five minutes of sleep. Plus, I couldn't resist the photo op. This is to inform you that there's a picture of you napping on my shoulder—which is now floating around somewhere in the social media universe. I suggest searching the hashtags #drool or #snoringinpublic. You have 62 likes and counting!

A fellow commuter

To the verbal tippers: Your constant compliments of how delicious the food is, how impeccable the service was and the incessant thank-yous do not mean anything to me when you tip me less than 20 percent. If you enjoyed everything so much then tip me accordingly, instead of leaving me a disappointing 15 percent. I had more faith in you than that. Don't think that your expressive appreciation equals any amount of hard cash.

A shortchanged waitress

To the late-night jammers: We've asked you to please stop practicing your music late at night three times now. So why then do I still hear the sour sounds of off-kilter bass and offbeat drumming along with a sub-standard guitar riff so early in the morning? You have all day to jam, yet you choose to start practicing at 1 am when most people in the building are trying to sleep. What makes it all worse is that you guys aren't even Allston hipsters; you're just some BU college bros who "dig music."

Shut up already

To* The Improper Bostonian: I'd just like to commend Sean Burns for writing an absolute spot-on review of Les Miserables. It was so aptly written that I felt like I was writing the review as I was reading it. The film truly should be shown in film schools as a way to teach students how NOT to direct a movie. It was absolutely atrocious direction, and I appreciate how Mr. Burns kept this as the focus of his review instead of the wonderful story we all know. Well done.

ASTA, AT LAST

The kitchen is a stage. At Asta, the highly anticipated new tasting-menu-only restaurant in the Back Bay, this is hardly a metaphor. The open kitchen stands at the back, with lighting and table heights suggesting that the cooks' performance is integral to the show. It's no accident, say Alex Crabb, chef/owner, and his partner, Shish Parsigian, who's the "front of house force." The focus at Asta is on the whole food experience and those who bring it to you. "We want it to feel more like a dinner party than a typical restaurant," says Parsigian.

The space resembles a Back Bay apartment with its raw but finished feel, the exposed brick artfully covered at its upper edges by partially demoed drywall. Instead of settings, each table comes equipped with two drawers stocked with an eclectic mix of utensils for use during the meal.

Though the atmosphere's sophistication is reflected in the menu, the food remains playful. For the three-course menu ($45), patrons will get a home-cooking feel, says Crabb, while the five- and eight-course menus ($70 and $95, respectively) are more intricate.

Don't ask for the signature dish—there isn't one. "We're going to have a signature approach to your meal and to the atmosphere," says Crabb, an L'Espalier alum. "One thing I've always liked to do is treat big pieces of vegetable like meat." For his celery dish, Crabb prepares a quarter-head of the vegetable, braised in chicken stock then seared and served with the sticky reduced stock, celery juice, black garlic gnocchi, crispy chicken skin and pieces of chicken confit. There's also the carrot "risotto," which contains no actual rice. The carrot, however, is cut to resemble the grain, then is bound with carrot puree and juice, mixed with licorice powder and mustard oil, and served with rye breadcrumbs.

Crabb favors simplicity with his proteins, choosing to highlight their inherent quality and downplaying accompaniments. But he's offering new flavors as well, including the meal that's become a Christmas morning tradition in his and Parsigian's home. Basturma and eggs combines herby, Armenian air-cured beef with stock and cream. Crabb wilts bitter greens, folds in the meat-infused cream and serves them with the beef and a poached egg. "It's very simple," says Crabb, "but a flavor that I don't think a lot of people have really encountered."

Q&A

OH, BOY

Mad Men actor Rich Sommer stars in the Massachusetts-based film Fairhaven, playing at the Somerville Theatre through Jan. 17 and on Video on Demand.

You and Chris Messina were in three movies together in 2012. What do you like most about working with him?

He's real good. When we did The Giant Mechanical Man, we had no scenes together, but I'd go and watch him a little bit. I think he's an exciting actor—no two takes are ever the same. It feels like you don't know whether he's going to hug you or hit you. I've been a fan of his for a long time, and the chance to get to share some time with him on-screen is an honor.

Does playing Harry Crane on Mad Men translate in any way to playing Fairhaven's Sam?

Sam and Harry Crane happen to look a lot alike, but other than that I certainly didn't think about Harry while we were doing Fairhaven, other than I was excited, I'm always excited, to go back to Mad Men. It felt like a very, very different thing to me. Harry is super ambitious, to the point of being sort of blind to how it affects people. Sam is anything but blind to how his life affects the people around him. I think that was a major difference, which I fully appreciated and hopefully was able to latch on to.

What's the difference between filming in Los Angeles and in Massachusetts?

Oh, God. If there's a similarity, I don't know what it is. Mad Men, while it's certainly very far from the most expensive show on TV to make, there's money involved. In Fairhaven, with no disrespect to our producers and backers, of which there were several, it was a different amount of money. And I think Tom O'Brien, who wrote, directed and stars in the movie, would say the same. It was sort of ramshackle the way we were running and gunning. It was truly independent filmmaking, versus filming in L.A., which is generally a studio-backed endeavor. In Fairhaven, we were just doing what we could with what we had. And frankly, I'm very, very proud of Tom for where this movie is and where it started. It's a really beautiful looking film.

You have a background in theater and improv. Were any scenes improvised?

Nothing was 100-percent-from-scratch improvved. We had our script, and we knew what points we had to hit in the script. From there the dialogue was very loosey-goosey. A lot of that dialogue is basically how Tom, Chris and I interact with each other in real life. There was a little bit of ribbing in the original script, but the amount of ribbing that's in the movie is certainly contributed by the three of us.

Drink of the Moment

Bi-Culturally Curious

NAME: Pierre Slinger.

PRICE: $14.

INVENTOR: Todd Wilkins, manager and beverage director at Nix's Mate.

INGREDIENTS: Domaine de Canton ginger liqueur, Zipang sake, lychee, lime, housemade vanilla bean syrup.

TASTE: Most lychee drinks are a smack of candied fruit, but this one veers to sparkly. The blended ginger and lychee are powerfully fragrant on the nose, but the lime cleans up the fumes with citrus. Vanilla gives the syrup weight, while all the fizz wells up at the end, balancing the sweet and tart notes with a crisp finish.

WHY "PIERRE"? Explains Wilkins, "Pierre was a Frenchman in 1782 who brought lychee into the European market." Domaine de Canton being French, the idea was to create a fusion between French and Asian flavors.

AND SLINGER? "A slinger is a Collins glass with water, lemon or lime."

FOR SAKE'S SAKE: Instead of the usual warm or cold sakes, Wilkins wanted something with extra verve. He struck on Zipang, which is naturally carbonated through secondary fermentation. "You see a lot of drinks with sake, but I wanted to mix it up with the carbonation. It's a refreshing change from Champagne or sparkling wine."

PAIR IT WITH: The lightness of the cocktail plays well off seafood, like fish and chips or bay scallops.

RAISING THE STEAKS

THE PURSUIT OF UMAMI IS LITTERED WITH THE carcasses of aged beeves. And no one cooks more venerable cow than Jay Murray, chef at the storied Grill 23 steakhouse. Murray has introduced a 100-day–wet-aged rib eye to the menu, trumping typical dry-aged cuts by a degree of months. "We call it hyper-extended wet-aging, or HEWA for short," says Murray. A conventional beef carcass, even sealed in cryovac, would rot over such a long period, while a dry-aged steak would shrivel into inedibility. "Our cattle are treated well, harvested with respect and the carcasses shrouded with linen and air-chilled for 48 hours before butchering. They survive the three-month aging period with grace and dignity." The result is a deep concentration of amino acids in the meat, rendering it more flavorful. More ardently umami. Adds Murray, "HEWA beef: Dude. The best."

They've Got Male

Christine Haddad

There's a special section at Emerge Spa & Salon where there are no girls allowed. The Men's Club, a 1,000-square-foot urban retreat, supplies gentlemen with downtime and flat-screens. "A male client usually comes to us because his wife, his girlfriend or any other female in his life is encouraging him to go," says spa director of Emerge and G2O, Christine Haddad. "Once they walk in the door [and] experience the service, they actually become a very loyal client."

The club offers barbershop work, like a traditional shave or a moustache trim, along with waxing, facials, massages, pedicures and manicures. "Most men need spa services, whether it's to help take care of their skin, remove the hair from their back, or get some type of a shave service from a professional where they can learn to take care of their skin," says Haddad. Treatments concentrate on guy-specific problem areas like muscle tension and razor burn, while the steam room and locker area sport mahogany details for added clubbiness. And what does the less-fair sex need to properly unwind? "I don't know what research it is, but men relax when they're watching TV," says Haddad.

Power Pamper

Having a smooth face is key to boosting your confidence as well as your appearance. So forget your inhibitions about your largest organ. Enter the Power Lift facial at the spa at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston. Show up early to unwind in the steam room and hot tub before the aesthetician gets down and dirty detoxifying your mug.

"The result is a cleansing that's seven times more effective than a manual face cleanse," says Sharon Holtz, the spa director. This isn't just soap—the technician uses a wand that pumps a current onto your skin to optimize various masks, making you feel as though your face is being softly massaged by small orbs.

To complete the cleansing, the aesthetician extracts (read: pinches, pops and squeezes) your pores to remove all trace of blackheads and blemishes. The technician zaps you with a high frequency current to heal your skin and hydrates you with a moisturizer from the spa's Refinery line, which was created specifically for men and their naturally thicker, oilier skin. You'll walk away with skin so smooth and confidence so high that you might consider asking the next woman you see to stroke your largest organ to see for herself—but don't. Please, just don't.

TAKE STOCK

News on Spain and steak

TEMPTED BY TAPAS? Pining for paella? Barcelona Wine Bar is now open in Brookline. Yes, it's part of a Connecticut-based restaurant group, but executive chef Steven Brand (formerly of UpStairs on the Square) assures us that it's no corporate clone.

"They let the chefs be chefs," he says, noting that part of the menu is his creation, including braised pork belly with kumquat marmalade and salt cod buñuelos. "Each restaurant is run by local guys doing what we do." Expect a selection of over three dozen tapas, a wide variety of meats and cheeses, including house-cured carne salada and imported jamón Ibérico de bellota, and three different types of paella. Brand and his team will also be roasting a suckling pig daily.

As for the wine, it's mostly Spanish and South American. Best of all, food and drink are served until 2 am on Friday and Saturday.

IS THE NEW STOCKYARD, which reopens any minute now, going upscale? General manager Gerry Lynch says the restaurant is looking to establish a new image he describes as "classic American tavern: a real fireplace, a big bar, lots of wood and a warm, welcoming feeling." Together with chef Bill Bramlett, a fellow Abe & Louie's alum, the staff aims to revamp the Allston/Brighton fixture while bringing back popular favorites like prime rib and lobster pie.

BACK TO BUSINESS: Mike & Patty's has reopened in Bay Village. David Bussison (one of four new owners) says they'll be serving the original menu with a couple tweaks, like a chorizo, egg and cheese sandwich.

LOVE'S EBB AND FLOW

Short stories about the complexities of the heart

JOAN WICKERSHAM'S NEW collection features seven short stories, each involving some sideways element of love or its cousin, infatuation. Very often, they also involve betrayal.

Dramatically, there's the case of Elvira, whose hypnotic and seemingly devoted Johnny turns out to love so many other women that she begins to paint pictures of this horde of rivals—1,172 in all—making them the preoccupation of her artistic life. When she dies, her friend sends the pictures to her straying love, in a rebuke to him and tribute to her.

Another woman, whose race-car–driving husband fatally crashed years earlier, forms a bond with Liza, who reveals that she had an underage affair with her cousin. Sympathies and shocking intimacies of unusual sorts fill this book.

The News From Spain: 7 Variations on a Love Story
By Joan Wickersham

Wickersham lives in Cambridge.

A dancer, paralyzed, connects with her gay caretaker, while her choreographer husband—just as he had done with her—seduces younger dancers. Yet there is sweetness in their post-paralysis marriage, just as there is between her and her caretaker, who treats her with a kind of sibling's cozy mischief. Wickersham elaborates on these often disturbing relationships with rueful sophistication, showing the compellingly mysterious and dangerous magnet of romance. ✖✖✖

"He was telling me about his granddaughter's birthday party, and I showed him pictures of my grandson. He said, 'His eyes are like yours. Who knew that this could happen? This mating dance that would never lead to mating, this circling in slow deep rhythm around photographs of grandchildren. I laughed and forgave us. We were in love; we didn't have to talk about it."

SNOW DAYS

CRY FOR ALP The lodge and its environs are a kid-friendly wonderland.

ON A ROAD TRIP WITH kids, after exhausting the diversions of the potato chip, the sing-along, the word game and the sobbing plea, a parent's burning wish is to finally answer affirmatively to, "Are we there yet?" There, in the case of Stowe Mountain Lodge, is worth every anarchic, motion-sick minute of the three-and-a-half-hour drive from Boston. The palatial, neo-Alpine hotel is a promised land of long corridors suitable for tag, gingerbread houses made for gawking and a staff that's mastered the Byzantine stratagems of the family ski trip. What sets Stowe apart from other mountain getaways is that every logistic has been planned, every transition anticipated. This is a resort built for the single-minded purpose of giving mom and dad a chance to ski 116 trails in peace.

Pulling up the driveway, you're struck by the oversized beauty of the architecture and by the speed of the bellhops, who whisk your luggage and groceries up to your room before the kids have had a chance to trampoline on the furniture. A two-bedroom suite amply houses a family of six, given a living-room sofa bed that the staff will make up before lights out. There're storage closets for ski gear, fireplaces for story time, lots of kitchen space for dinners and multiple flat-screens for Sponge Bob. Ask for a suite with a wraparound porch, ideal for gazing in quiet wonderment at Mt. Mansfield or for bouts of manic sprinting. Two large bathrooms will save you a fortune in therapy sessions. And don't miss ordering milk and homemade cookies from room service.

✓ Traveler's Checks

Sitters from Babies to Boomers often work as ski instructors at Stowe, so your kids may develop a bond with them on and off the slopes.

Full kitchens in the suites save money and hassle, so pick up groceries at the Shaw's near the highway exit. For gourmet sandwiches, pastries and produce, try Harvest Market on Route 108.

Start the morning by stepping out the hotel's back door and crossing the plaza to the Spruce Camp Base Lodge, a hall seemingly designed for frost giants who like exposed wood beams, upscale burgers and Obermeyer labels. Get fitted for gear by employees patient to the point of sanctity, then immediately check the children into the adjacent Adventure Center, a full-day ski school program. The magic of this is hard to overstate. Responsible, appealing instructors remove your floundering children at 8 am and return them at 3:30 pm, now capable of tearing up a Green slope while shouting, "French fries, pizza pie!" They also feed them lunch, as well as streams of hot chocolate glopped with marshmallows. For toddlers, a separate Cubs Daycare program is designed with an emphasis on playtime and the goal of acclimatizing a three-year-old to the concept that skis are a source of joy. The caregivers deliver a detailed report at pickup, so you know precisely how Junior's been progressing with his balancing skills and his relations with Flopsy the bunny puppet. They even cart tykes up Mt. Mansfield on the gondola for leisurely jollies.

COUNTRY TIME Rustic meets luxe

The purpose behind all the sign-in sheets, ID tags and manpower, of course, is to free your day for the slopes and a deserved après-ski moment in front of the fireplace at the Spruce Camp Bar. Considering the 39 miles of trails, it's a full itinerary, and if you need a refresher, the patient, relaxed instructors will have you steady on your feet within an hour. Then bask in the exaggerated geology, the rush of gravity and, mostly, the freedom.

After leaving all your gear with the lodge's ski valet for easy access the next morning, tromp the kids downstairs to the heated, outdoor pool, where they can expend any remaining energy playing Marco Polo while your muscles tenderize in the hot tub. Then it's a quick bathtime before your sitter arrives, which you can book through the meticulous (and insured) Babies to Boomers service.

If time permits, now is the moment to take a steam in the spa before showering for dinner at Solstice, the farm-to-table restaurant. Chef Josh Berry has the good fortune of running a kitchen that's in the heart of a mountain idyll instead of within the concrete borders of I-495, so his local sourcing means exquisite cheeses, neighborhood game and livestock raised in Vermont's immaculate pastures. Hence the heightened flavor of the local goat cheese croquettes with watercress, or the truffled beef pot roast. Savored along with the sight of Spruce Peak, it's a refined capstone to a day of sublime vistas, winter sports and very exhausted offspring. ***

Shojo makes Chinatown a bar-food destination.

Shojo
9A Tyler St., Boston
(617-423-7888)
shojoboston.com

SHORT STORY Successful ingredient mashups, like the braised short ribs with taro, reflect the confident menu.

THERE'S A YOUTHFUL ENERGY to Chinatown's first craft cocktail bar. Specializing in sake and house-infused vodka and gin, Shojo looks the part of an urban trendsetter with its graffiti mural (depicting the fable of a monkey on an epic quest for a sake river). The space is replete with concrete and dark wood, and music videos play on the wall. It's to Chinese cuisine what Bodega is to sneakers: a curated, funkified interpretation of a staple. When the team behind dim-sum mecca China Pearl set out to introduce something new to the neighborhood this past summer, and by extension lure neophytes to the district, they drew on Chinatown's strengths to create one of the best bar menus in Boston.

Start with the rightly raved pig baos ($8). A spin on the stuffed steamed breads found at dim sum, these fluffy, sweet buns come with fatty roast suckling pig offset by sliced cucumber, spicy kimchi, jalapeño and a smear of smoky barbecue sauce. The pork rivaled any in town, and for an appetizer, the portion (two per order) made for a generous starter. Duck fat fries ($5) were also delicious. Served in a fryer basket and accompanied by a Sriracha aioli light on the chili, the hand-cut potatoes had the clean, non-greasy taste that results from expert preparation. Sesame shrimp toast ($8), on the other hand, was crispy but oily, with the shrimp paste's delicate flavor lost amidst the grease.

Unfortunately, two of the restaurant's best dishes—the banh mi club ($7) and the "damn damn noodles" ($8)—were only offered on the lunch menu. Shojo's version of the Vietnamese sandwich featured char siu pork, bacon, cilantro, jalapeños, pickled carrots and daikon on a hoagie roll. The sweet, spicy, sour combination hit the perfect notes, but the untoasted, lackluster bread was a downgrade from the crispy French baguette of the traditional banh mi. The reinterpreted dan dan noodles packed a Szechuan peppercorn punch, and combined with a runny fried egg, the pork and noodle dish had a spicy, unctuous depth even without the usual peanut butter sauce.

Dinner entrees were more conceptual yet less memorable. While both the steak frites ($18) and shrimp and grits ($16) featured perfectly cooked meats, the accompaniments tended to overwhelm rather than complement. Kimchi butter and ginger-infused demi-glace were overkill on the beef; and bell pepper gravy obscured any nuance in the congee-chive grits. The char-siu pulled pork ravioli ($15) also suffered from too much of a good thing, as house-smoked bacon and shaved pecorino bombed the pasta with fat instead of flavor. The shrimp cappellini egg nest ($15) was standard Chinese banquet fare, with noodles shaped to form a nest then mounded with a shrimp-and-vegetable peanut sauce. A better choice was the braised short ribs ($17) with a star anise sauce and mashed taro base.

While the food was rich and plentiful, the cocktails were more elegant and restrained. The Reiko Greene ($11)—Hendrick's gin, green Chartreuse and lime—was emerald in color and glowed with a block of cucumber ice. The Dynasty Nail ($10)—which subbed Bombay Sapphire East and house-infused lemongrass Drambuie for the Rusty Nail's Scotch and Drambuie—was a stiff concoction. While the Reiko Greene would pair with most of the spicy-sweet dishes on the menu, the Dynasty Nail was better enjoyed as an aperitif. The sake offerings were as equally edited as the cocktail list, with half a dozen options ranging from the highest-grade junmai daiginjo Pure Dusk ($26) to the honjozo Funaguchi Eight Peaks ($75, bottle; $9, glass).

In keeping with their goal to draw new folks to Chinatown, first-cousin co-owners Brendan and Brian Moy run a welcoming, laid-back house. There are lots of smiles, ready recommendations, even an occasional, complimentary extra bao for that group of three, so they don't have to share. Shojo's hospitality, well-executed food and playful drinks present a strong case for the neighborhood as a place to go not only with fellow food-nerds for dumplings and noodles, but also with your work friends for drinks. While Shojo attracts all types, you'll feel a little cooler for knowing about it. ✖✖✖

TOUGH LOVE

Amour ★★½
Starring Jean-Louis Trintignant, Emmanuelle Riva and Isabelle Huppert. Written and directed by Michael Haneke. At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.

THE GREAT COMEDIAN Louis C.K. has a bleak, brilliant riff about why he finds it hard to be optimistic about dating. He says the best thing that could possibly happen is that you'll meet somebody who completes you in every way and you'll live happily together, but then one of you will die and the other, having lost their best friend, will just sit around all day, waiting for their turn to become nothing. And that's the best-case scenario.

I thought about that C.K. bit a lot during Amour, a brilliantly acted and impeccably crafted film that I never, ever want to see again. Michael Haneke makes a lot of these movies. The silver-bearded, doggedly humorless Austrian filmmaker has a temperament best described as punitive. Films like Caché and Funny Games torment their upper-crust, bourgeois protagonists—and by extension the kind of audiences who go see subtitled art films. To be a Haneke fan is to be a masochist.

With Amour he's found a villain even more ruthless than the homicidal home invaders in Funny Games, crueler than the proto-Nazi children in The White Ribbon and as devastating as the apocalypse in his Time of the Wolf. In Amour, the bogeyman is old age, wreaking havoc with the inevitable passing of time.

Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment that looks like a library. There are occasional visits from their self-obsessed daughter (Haneke regular Isabelle Huppert) and one trip into town for a performance by Anne's most successful pupil (pianist Alexandre Tharaud, playing himself). But a mysterious pre-credit sequence has already warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon, and clouds quickly begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast.

It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. With all of today's medical advances, death often takes its sweet time, and Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing physical and mental disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline.

There's an ache in Trintignant's performance that is palpably heartbreaking. But this is hardly an emotionally effusive couple, and you're not going to find any sentimental speeches in a Haneke movie. Georges and Anne knew these days would eventually arrive, and they're just trying to get through the inevitable with a bit of dignity. "We have always coped, your mother and I," he flatly says to Huppert, the matter-of-fact words belied by a sadness behind his eyes.

Georges promised not to send her back to the hospital, and the walls begin to close in on the formerly spacious apartment as the demands of home care take their toll. It's an ordeal sitting through Amour, in which the hushed air of austerity is broken only by almost imperceptibly understated moments of tenderness. I don't think I'll soon shake the loving embrace with which Georges carries Anne from the toilet, as shattering a depiction of "for better or for worse" as has probably ever been captured on-screen.

And yet, as with most Haneke projects, I find his precision suffocating. The filmmaking is always so fussy and exacting, determinedly marching through the director's chosen thesis statement with no deviations or surprises. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock, which I believe might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch.

I'm sure everybody brings his or her own personal baggage to Amour. My own grandfather spent the last 10 years of my grandmother's life caring for her at home after a stroke, with certain medical details unnervingly similar to those depicted in the film. Maybe it's because I was young, and Georges and Anne are very different personality types, but when I think of my grandparents, I don't think of the severity and repressed anguish that Haneke sometimes wallows in here. I mostly recall laughter, watching Lawrence Welk and the beaming adoration Bill and Jule shared for one another even in the most painful of circumstances. That, to me, is the best-case scenario. ✖✖✖

ACT LOCALLY

Titus Andronicus
plays the Sinclair on Jan. 27.

"I KNOW THE WORLD'S a scary place," Patrick Stickles sings in "My Eating Disorder," the song that centers Local Business, the third album from his band, Titus Andronicus. "That's why I hide behind a hairy face."

But Stickles isn't hiding much these days. Not only did the New Jersey punk-rocker shave his heavy beard, but he's made his life an increasingly open book as he faces a wider audience.

"I like to think that I've kept it pretty real," says Stickles, 27. "Honesty is the best policy in life as in art, and in my earthly experiences that's what I'm an expert on, so that's what I feel qualified to write about."

That real-life approach informs songs like "Tried to Quit Smoking" (he failed after a few weeks) and "(I Am the) Electric Man," inspired by suffering an electrical shock at his band's rehearsal space. "My Eating Disorder" blows open a particularly unusual and personal topic, a "selective eating" condition that he's lived with since childhood.

Stickles eats only a limited range of foods, and no matter how hard he tries, he says he can't keep anything else down. Being on tour is especially difficult. "It's tough to find the stuff I like, which is annoying," he says. "But it's just part of my struggle."

Stickles has also battled depression, taking medication for several years. In "My Eating Disorder," a track that climaxes with the desperate, lurching coda "Spit it out!" Stickles questions the effects of anti-depressants first administered by his parents. The sentiment recalls his lyric from another song, "My authentic self was aborted at the age of four."

"That refers to the age at which I started using drugs, Ritalin in this case," he says. "I've been quite concerned over the years with the extent at which feelings and emotions and cognition stuff are really just chemical reactions in our brain. Which ones are authentic, and which ones do we choose for ourselves? And is that OK? That's been another one of my struggles. Is it the real me that's done all these things, or is it the various substances?"

All this from an album that begins with the broadside "Everything is inherently worthless," a starting point that Stickles doesn't relegate to pessimism. "Hopefully that would be a good place to begin further discussions," he says. "With everything being worthless, that empowers the individual to determine what is actually worth something for them. Everything has the potential to suck, but it also has the potential to be as great as you please."

Named for Shakespeare's bloodiest play, Titus Andronicus has displayed great potential since its 2008 debut, The Airing of Grievances. Stickles, whose parents are educators, studied literature and philosophy in college with plans to teach before he shelved academia for rock 'n' roll. He was drawn to punk for "the honesty, the immediacy, the urgency, the freedoms inherent in it," he says. "It's really just a blank canvas, a big open space where you can do whatever you like."

Stickles stretched that canvas to his conceptual whims, particularly on 2010's ambitious jewel, The Monitor, which closed with a 14-minute track about a Civil War naval battle and his own retreat from Boston, having courted a woman here in 2008. That album featured members of several bands, including Hub indie-rockers Hallelujah the Hills, who sported horns and bagpipes.

By contrast, Local Business consolidates Titus Andronicus' shifting lineup into a five-man core whose more streamlined attack reflects influences from Bruce Springsteen to Thin Lizzy and Neil Young's Crazy Horse. The quintet hits the Sinclair on Jan. 27.

The title Local Business holds multiple meanings for Stickles, from support for local businesses ("the lifeblood of American capitalism at its best") to an effort to contrast The Monitor's historical bent, favoring something "close to home, not so abstract or mired in metaphors." His band has also grown its own commercial enterprises. "We sell T-shirts and concert tickets and stuff," Stickles says. "It's a way of addressing that duality of being a punk band that had certain anti-capitalism or anti-consumerist sentiments behind it and is now somewhat complicit in those things." ×××

WHIP SMART

A dominatrix's insights into relationships

A different beat

MY WIFE AND I USED TO joke about a lot of things. One of them was our amazement at men who had lost their spouses remarrying within a year of their bereavement. "What idiots," I'd say, not understanding the desperate need to remarry as quickly as possible. Now I understand this phenomenon. Guys are helpless, clueless, lost.

Given the fact that men are idiots, it makes me think, "What happened to old-fashioned romance?" One of my best friends in the world is a retired divorce lawyer and one of the most romantic people I've ever known. When the birth control pill was introduced in the early 1960s, my friend said to me, shaking his head, "The world is 2 billion years old, and I was born five years too soon." He practiced law, but he lived for art and romance, completing a master in fine arts at night while working on divorces by day.

I get on different rants from time to time. For a while now, my rants have been about relationships. "You can't even define this word today," I spout. "I'm in love with a goat, the goat makes me happy, and I'll bet I can find someone in America to marry me to the goat."

"That would be me," replied a woman I had just met at a party. She was a spiritual person who had spent a lot of time in Taos, N.M.

"You can marry me to a goat?" I asked.

"I'm qualified," she told me.

Wow. I know that ships' captains can perform a marriage, and that in Massachusetts you can get registered, for one day and one ceremony, to legally hitch a couple. My wife used to claim that the last dozen weddings we attended were probably not legal, considering they were half Buddhist, half Jewish or part Hindu, part Episcopalian. "Whatevah," as young people say. Marriage is difficult enough under any circumstances, and, among so many people I know, it seems the divorce rate is closer to 60 or 70 percent, not the roughly 50 percent statistic quoted so often in the press.

I used to think the ideal relationship in life was three weeks per month married and one week not. But we're still a helplessly middle-class nation, still so young compared to most countries on the planet, still lost in the remnants of Calvinism, no matter what a person's background. I'm not advocating anything racy, just time apart from usual routines, a chance to recharge.

Recently, I've been on book tour, wandering the country and paying attention to people's stories. One of the chapters in my new book is called "The Value of Personal Notes." Very few people write notes these days. But folks who receive them tend to say, "Oh boy, a personal note. I'm gonna save this one." They resonate. A few weeks ago, I received a note postmarked New York City. When I split open the envelope, dozens of little annoying bits of red heart confetti spilled out. A woman who had read my stuff said, "We probably could really be of use to one another. You could help me with people, and I know I could help you with lots of things. I have nothing to lose in writing." And she signed the note, Mistress Rose.

Hmm, I thought. I'm pretty sure no one is named Mistress Rose.

Several weeks later, Mistress Rose e-mailed me with specifics. "You may have guessed," she wrote, "I'm a dominatrix." My reaction was, "She's an entrepreneur! How can I not see her?" On her next trip to Boston, we arranged to meet for lunch at a Downtown restaurant. Every head in the place turned as Mistress Rose made her entrance: short skirt, satin baseball jacket, rings on every finger, lower lip-ring, ready to rock 'n' roll.

"I'm Mistress Rose," she smiled.

"Of course you are," I answered.

She talked shop with me for almost two hours. She was animated and quick to smile and laugh. I estimated her age to be late-20s. "No sex," she said early in our conversation.

"Really?"

"No, just the pleasure for them of a little spanking, or role-playing, my pitiful slaves. I tell them up front, and they have to sign a release removing me from liability, although I've had a few cardiac incidents over the years."

"You have a real sense of humor. How do you keep a straight face doing all this?"

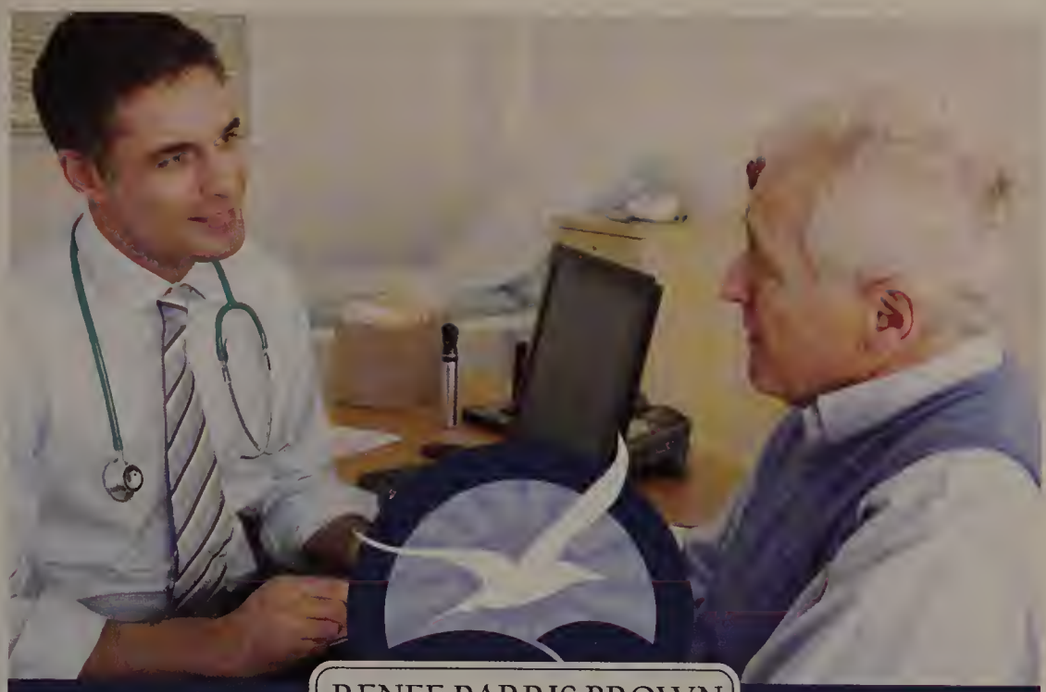
Mistress Rose spoke with a real British accent, not an imitation. She smiled a cute smile. "I'm working a job, darling," she said. "And I take my job seriously. I'm a dom; I went to dom school, not stand-up comedy."

"What's your mix of clients?"

"You'd be surprised. For instance, I see a lot of corporate CEOs, people who dominate many subordinates, and deep down they feel unworthy, that they're somewhat of a fraud, and need and want to be punished."

I thought I'd probably know some of these people—and in government, as well—who should be punished. But I suppose I wouldn't want them to get pleasure out of it.

"I also have the people who need a little hurt," she said. "Many of them former prep-school types who get used to a bit of the rod when they were young. And then there's a scattering of priests."



Finally, I asked Mistress Rose about her take on relationships and why men really came to her.

"I think that most of the problems people have with sexuality is that they almost never share with their partners what they would really like. They're not honest with one another or free to own up to little needs or requests. So they'll pay for it outside of marriage and keep what really turns them on a secret."

When we got up after lunch, she shouldered a leather bag. Out of it poked the handle of a small riding crop. I pointed it out to her, and Mistress Rose said, "Have crop, will travel." And she handed me half a dozen business cards.

"Just in case," she said. ×××

ANTISOCIAL MEDIA

A catalogue of connected jerks

YOU MAY BE FAMILIAR WITH the Mitch Albom book The Five People You Meet in Heaven. Well, this column is like that, in the sense that I'll describe five people. However, these people are right here on Earth, and you probably know them. In fact, you might be one them—one of the Five Annoying People You'll Meet on Social Media.

The Facebook "Please Ask Me to Elaborate" Friend

The other day, my wife and I were arguing about whether teeth are bones. Heather said that skeletons have teeth, and thus, teeth are bones. I replied that skeletons also have hair, but that doesn't mean that hair is made of bone. She contended that skeletons don't have hair, at which point I invoked the Crypt Keeper from Tales From the Crypt. "That guy was a skeleton," I said. "And he had tons of hair."

Crypt Keeper had hair therefore teeth are not bones. I rest my case, your honor. Sometimes I think the legal world really missed out when I was discouraged from attending law school due to my "bad grades," "horrible LSAT score" and "criminal record."

Anyway, if I were to post the above anecdote on Facebook, I'd write it pretty much as I did here. The "Please Ask Me to Elaborate" people, though, will never simply tell you what's happening. They want you to unravel the mystery one comment at a time because obviously their lives are a rich tapestry of drama and intrigue, such that you will postpone eating and sleeping and bathing until you learn what treacherous villainy prompted the posting of a lone frowny emoticon.

Here's a typical post by the Ask Me to Elaborate Person: "Worst day ever and you know why. If I ever see you at that certain place, you know what'll happen and how. :(."

The LinkedIn Requester

No offense if you've asked me to connect on LinkedIn, but I'm not on LinkedIn. I honestly know nothing about it and have never been to the site, but I imagine LinkedIn being the BlackBerry of social media sites—like Facebook but without any fun. In any case, a social media site doesn't become interesting to me until people use it to mistakenly post photos of their genitals. And as far as I know, that hasn't yet happened on LinkedIn. Maybe someone should send Brett Favre an invite.

The Skype Caller

Skype makes you look like a deformed troll unless you manage to get your computer above your face and at least three feet away, in which case you're thinking way too hard about Skype. Basically, I will go out of my way not to Skype if there's any possible alternative. I'd rather incur an international roaming charge from the jungles of Borneo than have the person on the other end see what I look like from a low angle and lit solely by a laptop screen. In a police lineup, if one of the suspects was on Skype you'd always pick that one as the murderer.

The Twitter Lingo'er

For the Twitter Lingo'er, each tweet crams the maximum amount of communication into 140 characters. There are no actual words, merely symbols, runes and Bitly links. The current world champion lingo'er is a nine-year-old Malaysian prodigy who successfully transmitted Voltaire's Candide in a single tweet.

The Conspiracy Theorist

As a member of the so-called mainstream media, these are the people I revile the most. My colleagues and I go to great lengths to suppress information, and then these people come along and blow our cover. Here I am, doing my best to keep the public ignorant, and then some whistleblower ruins all my work with a Facebook post entitled, "Why wasn't this on the news?!" We journalists, keepers of the News, would have you think that your story wasn't on CNN merely because it didn't happen, but you know better. The reason you're hearing that spellbinding tale of heroism/protest/political malfeasance via your friend Scabby instead of from Brian Williams is because your friend Scabby isn't afraid of the truth. And Brian Williams obviously is.

All professional journalists know that the only proven, reliable source of fact-checked news is Facebook. Look, a lot of those posts originally came from other websites! People don't just set up websites to spread falsehoods. Except for the ones at Snopes. They're obviously paid to say that Scabby's story about the four-year-old Texas boy fighting off an invading Mexican drug cartel contains a shred of truth only if you read it as an extremely loose retelling of the Battle of San Jacinto.

Conspiracy theorists, there's a special place for people like you. And that place is LinkedIn. ✖✖✖

Soroff On ROB CORDDRY

The comedy star talks about Scooby-Doo, joke construction and why television is doomed.

WEYMOUTH NATIVE ROB CORDDRY GRADUATED FROM UMASS Amherst and rocketed to fame on The Daily Show With Jon Stewart. In 2007, he starred in the Fox sitcom The Winner, and in 2008 he launched the Web series Childrens Hospital, which now airs on Cartoon Network's Adult Swim and won an Emmy in 2012. Corddry has appeared in dozens of feature films, including Old School, Hot Tub Time Machine, What Happens in Vegas and Harold and Kumar Escape From Guantanamo Bay, while his TV credits include Curb Your Enthusiasm and Arrested Development. This year he appears in the zombie film Warm Bodies, Michael Bay's Pain and Gain (opposite Mark Wahlberg) and the animated feature Escape From Planet Earth. He lives in Los Angeles with his wife and two daughters.

Jonathan Soroff: You have like 15 movies at Sundance. Think you'll get a chance to ski?
Rob Corddry: Absolutely not. It takes so much effort for me to put my pants on in the morning, let alone a whole ski outfit. So even if I had a week up there and there was no film festival, you still wouldn't find me on the slopes.

Is Jon Stewart the anti-Christ?
Absolutely, and I think he'd be the first to admit it. They always said the anti-Christ would be beautiful and charismatic, and people would follow him, and also that he'd be Jewish and really short.

Sickest thing on Childrens Hospital*?*
Oh, boy. We're just holding a mirror up to nature. [Laughs.]

Was guest star Jon Hamm hung like a donkey?
I'm going to say no because then he'd be deformed. And John Hamm is perfect.

Is there any topic that's taboo for you?
To be honest, there's a lot of stuff we don't do on Childrens Hospital because it's too dark. You don't want to see sick kids. They're kind of a comedy killer. But we did do a 9/11 joke when we were on the Web.

Is Weymouth the promised land?
I can't get a bead on Weymouth, nor have I ever been able to. My fond feelings about it are based mostly on nostalgia, but from what everyone else says, it's a shole.

Your dad worked for Massport. Doesn't that mean that by the laws of Massachusetts nepotism, you should be working there, too?
I think I do. I'm on the payroll. I'm going to call my accountant the moment we get off the phone and find out if they're sending me my checks.

Is UMass Amherst the Harvard of western Massachusetts?
It's the Harvard of Playboy party schools. And allow me to point out: I'm on fire right now. Who needs A.D.D. medication?

You were a security guard at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. Ever have to cuff someone?
No, but I did have to tell a lot of school kids to stop touching famous paintings. But my strangest job was in college. I was an undercover security guard in the school store. So I'd bust people for shoplifting and then go steal a bunch of CDs. I owe them some money. Maybe I'll forward them my Massport checks.

Why are people from Boston funny?
It's cold there eight months out of the year. Plus, they're descended from Puritans, which definitely fuels sarcasm.

Is bathroom humor intrinsically funny?
Absolutely! Anyone who doesn't think bathroom humor is funny is an idiot. Everybody poops. It's the basis of observational humor. Every funny thing Seinfeld ever said was indirectly a poop joke.

Is the Internet going to displace TV?
It already has. Everything I do is on the Internet. Ninety-nine percent of my work is done online. The only thing holding us back is bandwidth speed. Once we work that out, it's curtains for conventional TV. And good riddance.

How often do you Google yourself?
I IMDb myself every day because I'm casting Childrens Hospital and need to see who I've been in movies with, so I can beg them to be on the show. But Google, not so much. There's no new information. Nothing very interesting.

Favorite cartoon of all time?
Anything in the anthropomorphized animal genre, which is really all of them. But I guess maybe Scooby-Doo. Those kids really know how to solve a mystery.

Are you afraid of clowns?
No, and the people who say they are annoy me because I think they just want attention.

Finish this joke: A hooker, a priest and a rabbi get stuck on an elevator...
Three hours later, they'd really gotten to know each other. And the priest said, "I'm scared." And the rabbi said, "I'm scared, too." And the hooker said, "That makes three of us. Is there really a God?" Classic joke construction.

Person with whom you'd least like to be stuck on an elevator?
My children.

Think there's a porn video in your future?
Performing? No. But there's definitely porn in my future because my wife just took the kids out, and I've got 45 minutes alone.

Strangest fan encounter?
This isn't strange so much as depressing. I had just gotten engaged to the love of my life, and I was at the SXSW festival in Austin, Texas. Very much in love. Could not wait to spend the rest of my life with her. And I got hit on by three girls who loved The Daily Show and wanted me to go up to their hotel room with them. Super bummer. I was like, "Where were you eight months ago?" They ruined my life, those three.

Does your name have one too many d's in it?
Stephen Colbert, the moment I met him, said, "Your name has no vowels!" I guess the y is questionable. I should've changed my name to Dustin Diamond, but apparently, that's Screech's porn handle. ✖✖✖

GIRL TALK

WOMEN EXPERTS GIVE GUYS
STRAIGHT ADVICE ABOUT DRESSING,
GROOMING, AND HOW TO IMPRESS A LADY.

MEN HAVE OPINIONS.

If they didn't, the world would never have embraced noodling for catfish, or day trading. But since men's opinions are sometimes in need of gentle repositioning (or, in cases, a correcting thwack), we asked female experts to deliver unvarnished lifestyle advice. Here, then, are practical tips on how to cook a meal for a woman, how to conduct a first date, how to get a haircut, how to build a wardrobe and how to work out. Turns out, ladies like glutes.

ON DRESSING

BY ANDREW RIMAS

TO RESUSCITATE AN AILING WARDROBE, YOU NEED MONEY AND effort. But you also need education. Alisa Neely of Scout, a personal styling service, makes a career out of tutoring men (and women) on the importance of a nicely fitted leg.

"The most important thing I ask is, 'What's your lifestyle?'" says Neely. "That makes a difference on the pieces you invest in." For most gentlemen, two all-year suits and one summer suit are sufficient, but it's important to keep them sharp. "Slimmer is what's happening now in men's fashion. Often male clients like to be comfortable, and they take that too far." Additionally, smaller collars and lapels demand a thinner tie. "The fat tie is dated."

Neely also recommends giving thought to shoes. "It's not that expensive shoes make you look better. You can find a nice Cole Haan at Marshalls." Avoid square toes, and plump for both a good pair of black and brown shoes, and a casual boot to wear with jeans (never gym sneakers). "Men need nice jeans," says Neely. "I love Diesel. Levi's makes some great ones. AG Jeans does nice ones for men." Opt for embellishments or whiskering only at the risk of looking like a screaming douche.

Every man should also own a quality, fitted trench coat and a wool coat for winter. Pocket squares and patterned socks, too, are currently fashionable, and should complement the outfit—not necessarily match it. As for headgear, "Sometimes. But you don't always want to be wearing a hat. You don't want to look like you're trying too hard."

ON DATING

BY HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

FEMINISM HAS DONE A LOT FOR LADY-KIND, BUT IT'S THROWN THE gents for a loop when it comes to dealing with the so-called fairer sex. "The hard thing in the dating world now is that women are very strong," says Janine Bush, founder of J. Allen Matchmaking. "Men aren't taking on that chivalrous role that they used to." What women really want is a man. Think Mad Men without the misogyny and cheating, mixed with just a dash of nearly any Ryan Gosling character. The basics:

First, the encounter. "You should approach a woman within three seconds of seeing her," says Bush. By acting fast, you don't have the time to talk yourself out of it or fall victim to the creep factor (looking at her longingly all night but never making a move). Pickup lines are encouraged, as long as you don't actually mean them. "Get their guard down, you're going to win," says Bush. "Anything that breaks the ice."

Next, the date. All first dates should come in two parts, says Bush, who recommends appetizers at a bar for a younger crowd and a full dinner for those a little older. The first half of the date should be an activity—going bowling, visiting a museum, taking a bike ride—something that shows another side to your personality. Activities help brush the stiffness off a first date, so that you're comfortable sitting down and talking one-on-one.

Finally, the send-off. "The safety issue is something that men need to consider," says Bush. The old standards still apply, no matter how independent women become: Escort your date to her T stop or car, or hail her a cab. Once there, lean in for a hug (use both arms), and leave a lingering kiss on her cheek.

ON GROOMING

BY NICK ALTSCHULLER

ORIANA HARRIS HAS BEEN STYLING HAIR FOR SIX YEARS AND, AS HER father is Marc Harris, owner of Salon Marc Harris, she's grown up in the business.

"One of my guy friends said to me, 'I need a big boy haircut. What should I do?'" For Harris, the first step is: Stop getting the same damn cut. "Be age appropriate," she says. "For too many guys it's a number one clip on the sides and two on the top. It's important for your personal style to evolve."

Think new but classic, like the Boardwalk Empire–inspired dos that have sprouted around town. If that's too far a step into skinny jeans, at least ask for texture. "Texture is probably the most important thing for guys' hair," says Harris. "It removes weight and bulk, and it gives shape that a barber's clippers can't."

Post snip, while it may be scary, try some product. "A lot of guys think L.A. Looks gel from middle school is the only thing," says Harris. No one wants to wear, or touch, a head of crunchy spikes, so grab a bottle of Bumble and Bumble grooming cream ($28, 5 oz.; $12, 2 oz.). "It helps tame hair without it looking like it has a lot of product," says Harris. "It's a better version of your hair." If that pharmacy aisle is too intimidating, let your laziness work in your favor and skip a shampooing. Over-clean hair can be puffy, shapeless and altogether unmanly.

Maintenance is also key. "There's nothing worse than a hairy neck or overgrown sideburns," Harris says. Many salons, like Marc Harris, offer quick and complimentary neck trims between appointments.

Of course, even Samson's hair receded. Once 50 percent of your previously fertile plain becomes a barren tundra, it's time to go short. "When people try to hold on to it, and it gets long, it ends up looking worse," says Harris. But she assures you, everything's going to be OK. "It's life. Just let it go."

ON COOKING

BY LINH TRAN BRINCAT

THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART IS THROUGH HIS STOMACH, SO THE cliché goes, but a woman's vital organs are much more discriminating. It's not only about how the dish tastes (if that were the case, what's to stop you from plating takeout from Mistral?), but also about the thought and creativity that goes into its preparation. Carolyn Johnson, executive chef at 80 Thoreau, recommends not only knowing what your beloved prefers to ingest, but which meal of the day is her favorite.

Johnson speaks from experience, as her significant other, Bill Flumerfelt, chef de cuisine at Nubar at the Sheraton Commander, successfully seduced her with his breakfast cookery when they both worked at Icarus. "Potatoes cooked in duck fat," she recounts more than a decade later. "Eggs every way."

What sealed the deal for Johnson, though, were the dozen handmade fortune cookies Flumerfelt whipped up one Valentine's Day early on in their courtship. "They all had different fortunes," Johnson says. "Some of them were funny. Some were sweet. It was a good mix."

Though it might sound daunting to anyone without a pastry degree, Johnson says the cookies aren't hard to make. "The folding action is the trickiest element. You have to fold the cookies up while they're still hot." The potential for burns and blisters is all the more reason your lady friend will appreciate the effort. As another cliché goes, no pain, no gain.

ON EXERCISE

BY HANNAH SHEINBERG

JUMBO-SIZE PROTEIN POWDER, TOO-TIGHT TANK TOPS AND referring to triceps and biceps as guns—men's exercise has become a caricature of sorts. But women don't expect, or even want, a bulged-vein bodybuilder who flexes in front of the mirror. "I think [men] need to concentrate on building a healthy amount of muscle," says Megan Graham, a competitor in Miss Bikini USA and Miss Bikini America who also owns her own salon, Megan Graham Beauty, on Newbury Street. "It doesn't look good when a guy is too scrawny. I don't think girls are necessarily looking for Mr. Universe, either."

When it comes to the actual process of working out, Graham, who exercises three times a week and can bench press 250 pounds, recommends a full-body routine including squats, deadlifts and hip thrusts. "Crunches aren't really using up a lot of calories, so you're better off doing something to stabilize your whole body, so you can actually get more results in a shorter amount of time." Building your core helps ward off the toothpick leg syndrome—a direct result of only training upper-body muscles—and overall maximizes the body parts that women will really notice. "I think women are checking out men's butts, personally," says Graham. "They should be working on that."

But the most important rule for men while exercising is proper workout etiquette. "You could not do anything worse than to try to pick someone up at the gym." Especially if you're extending an invite to the gun show.

UNDER THE INFLUENCE

HOW TO IGNORE THE TRENDS AND NAVIGATE THE WORLD OF THE AMERICAN SPIRIT

BY NICK ALTSCHULLER • PHOTOGRAPHED BY ADAM DETOUR

IMPROPER.COM

THREE SHEETS TO THE WIND,

THE JOURNEY OF AN AMERICAN WHISKEY DRINKER BEGINS IGNOBLY, IN WHAT CAN BE CALLED THE EARLY TIMES. THIS IS A PERIOD OF PLASTIC JUGS, WELL DRINKS AND BOTTLES HIDDEN IN PAPER SACKS. (THE KENTUCKY GENTLEMAN MAY BE ENTERTAINING, BUT YOU DON'T WANT TO BE CAUGHT IN HIS COMPANY.) IN THE BEGINNING, ROTGUT IS THE CALL, JIM IS A NEW FRIEND, AND JACK IS FOR THOSE JUST PUTTING ON AIRS.

But like a Whopper fan who begins to appreciate the tastes of a flame-licked rib eye, the American whiskey world opens to those who delve. Today, the spirit is more popular than ever. Ask Joy Richard, bar and beverage manager for the Franklin Restaurant Group. She opened Citizen Public House in 2010 with about 90 whiskies. Two years later, the bar was redesigned to accommodate 100 more. Says Richard, "The reason we have so few is because we're very selective."

But, of course, this being a matter of food and drink, there's always a sacred cow, consecrated by the media and fetishized by chat boards. In American whiskey, its name is Pappy Van Winkle. This rhapsodized Kentucky bourbon sports a label you may never see except on boastful Facebook posts or in fuzzy Instagram images: a distinguished Southern man smoking a cigar. He's as elusive as a confirmed Bigfoot sighting, making would-be aficionados a little rabid. "I'm terrified to let anyone know we have it because my bartenders will get beat up for it," says Richard.

Calm down, people. American whiskey is not a beverage about status. That's what Scotch is for. Let your connoisseurship come through experimentation, because people who settle on a single favorite are just looking for easy answers. And if life were easy, we wouldn't need a drink.

ANOTHER EXPERT WHO KNOWS

ABOUT THE CRAZY DEMAND FOR PAPPY IS TJ DOUGLAS.

"THE FASCINATION COMES FROM THE FACT THAT PEOPLE want something they can't get," he says. As the GM and co-owner of the Urban Grape, Douglas receives about five calls a day requesting American whiskey's most desirable brand. He keeps a waiting list with dozens of names, but like every seller, his annual allocation has dropped—from a dozen bottles in 2012 to just five last year for both Urban Grape locations. Which means you may be more likely to get that ring about your Patriots season tickets than your bottle of Pappy.

With whiskey, there's only so much made and so much to go around. "You can make vodka in a day," say Douglas. "Distill grain, boom, you have vodka.

This?" he says pointing to a bottle of James E. Pepper bourbon, "takes 15 years."

That's why distilling giant Jim Beam ran out of Knob Creek in 2009, but you'll never hear of a Great Smirnoff Drought. So while your odds of finding Pappy are slim, there're a lot of great whiskies out there. It's a complicated realm of grains and woods and proofs and bizarre folklores and bylaws.

FOR DOUGLAS, FINDING THE RIGHT WHISKEY COMES DOWN TO A SIMPLE QUESTION: HOW DO YOU WANT TO DRINK IT?

GENIES OF THE BOTTLE

For your home bar, you're going to need some standbys. Solid, reliable (OK, cheaper) drams for your nightcaps and parties. Then there are your investment pieces—the whiskies taken out for special occasions and for true friends, or when it's Wednesday and you're thirsty. It's just whiskey, you're an adult, so pop the top, already. Richard and Jackson Cannon, bar director at Eastern Standard, Island Creek Oyster Bar and bar director/owner at the Hawthorne, offer some handpicked options.

TOP SHELF

High West Rendezvous Rye Whiskey

Here's high-class booze out of Park City, Utah, of all places. In 2007 High West became the state's first legal distillery in 137 years. A blend of six-year and 16-year ryes, Rendezvous "starts sweet, but you get some vegetal notes, brininess and tobacco," says Richard. At Citizen, ask for the limited edition, aged 29 months in rye barrels.

$61 at Boston Wine Exchange,
181 Devonshire St., Boston (617-422-0100) bostonwineexchange.com

Jefferson Presidential Select 18 Year

"If you're looking for the excellent whiskies from the sea that's out there, look for someone to pluck out exceptional examples," advises Cannon. He recommends visiting Ryan Maloney, owner of Julio's Liquors. To find this woody, slightly sweet bourbon, Maloney flew to Kentucky on a Super Bowl Sunday to explore the abandoned Stitzel-Weller Distillery, founded by the original "Pappy" Julian Van Winkle Sr. in 1935.

$95 at Julio's Liquors,
140 Turnpike Road, Westborough (508-366-1942) juliosliquors.com

Elijah Craig 18 Year Old Single Barrel

Whiskey is a numbers game. Too much aging can mean too much evaporation, and the ideal levels of tannin and char can fade. At 18 years, this option "is getting into what I consider slightly over-aged," says Cannon. "Twelve is the peak, but this belongs in the conversation with Pappy 15."

Last seen for $90 at Julio's Liquors,
140 Turnpike Road, Westborough (508-366-1942) juliosliquors.com

ON THE RAIL

Old Overholt Straight Rye Whiskey

Priced less than some cocktails around town, this bottle is the "granddaddy of value," says Cannon. "It's lean, light and proofed down for mixing," he adds. "It makes a fine Sazerac and mixes well in sours."

$15 at Downtown Wine & Spirits,

Johnny Drum Private Stock 101

Whether there's truth in advertising is debatable, but there's always a markup. "I try and stay away from the mass marketing because you can get much better whiskies at better prices," says Richard. Toasty with notes of maple, one of her favorites packs serious punch with a low price tag.

$30 at Marty's Fine Wines,

Bernheim Original Kentucky Straight Wheat Whiskey

Made with 51 percent soft winter wheat, Bernheim is America's only designated wheat whiskey. "When you take the rye out, the wheat gives it a softer, easy-drinking profile," explains Richard.

$30 at Martignetti Liquors,
1650 Soldiers Field Road, Brighton (617-782-3700) martignettiliquors

LOCAL LURES

THERE ARE SOME TASTY NEW ENGLAND BRANDS IF YOU'RE LOOKING TO SHOP LOCAL. BUT CONSIDER, WHEN WAS THE LAST TIME YOU SAW A ROLLING FIELD OF WHEAT IN RHODE ISLAND? WE CAN DRINK IT WITH AS MUCH GUSTO AS ANYONE, BUT WE NORTHERNERS ARE NOT A WHISKEY PEOPLE.

The business is notoriously hush-hush about where they source and distill their product. They'll thank you to simply be impressed by the wizened, bearded coot on the label and move along, please. That said, there are some nearby companies creating some worthwhile booze.

Distilled in Canada with 100-percent Canadian grain, the Vermont-based WhistlePig produces a butter-smooth 10-year rye ($70, the Urban Grape) with the help of Dave Pickerell, who previously spent 14 years as the master distiller for Maker's Mark. Funny name; serious hooch.

While better known for their gins, Berkshire Mountain Distillers uses Massachusetts corn for their Berkshire Bourbon ($40, Kappy's Fine Wine & Spirits). They even cut, mill and char local oak and cherry for aging their New England Corn Whiskey.

Will and Davis Willis, the brothers behind Boston's Bully Boy Distillers, harvest wheat from Maine for their vodka. For their new American Straight Whiskey ($35, Julio's Liquors), they source barley, corn and rye from Kansas for a spirit that's almost dangerously easy drinking.

To add some local nuance to any whiskey, try Hammerstone's Whiskey Disks ($30, the Urban Grape), handcrafted in New Hampshire (from Canadian soapstone). "It makes the heat go away, so you can focus on the flavors," explains Douglas. "Drop one in, but gently—because it's a rock."

INSTANCE GRATIFICATION

FROM SMALL-BATCH TO MASS-PRODUCTION, THERE'S A WHISKEY FOR EVERY OCCASION. THREE LOCAL AUTHORITIES SHARE THEIR PERFECT MOMENTS FOR A PARTICULAR MAKE.

A WINTER TAILGATE

"Rye fills the bill, and my pick is Prichard's Rye ($50, Martignetti Liquors), hailing from Kelso, Tenn. Spicy and drier than bourbon, it's a perfect warmer straight from a flask on a cold day. At 95 percent rye in the mashbill, one might not expect such balance and smooth finish, but it's aged in small oak barrels, which integrates and rounds out the whiskey's flavors—showing apple, cinnamon and toasted vanilla. A sip should melt my frozen toes, otherwise I might start singing a line from an old Tex Ritter song from 1948: 'It's a whiskey, rye whiskey, rye whiskey I cry. If I don't get rye whiskey, well, I think I will die.'" Josh Childs, bartender and co-owner of Silvertone Bar & Grill, Trina's Starlite Lounge and Parlor Sports

A BONFIRE ON THE BEACH

"I don't know what's in the mash. I don't know how many years it's been aged. All I know is that it's spelled 'whisky' like its Scottish cousins, and it tastes really good sitting by a bonfire with your boys. George Dickel No. 8 ($27, Marty's Fine Wine) was the whiskey of choice for me and my friends during college. It was cheap and smooth. I hadn't had it since my tailgating days until this fall. My wife and I just bought a house close to the beach around Labor Day. I had some friends come down to see the place but hadn't unpacked the bar yet. On a last-second run to the liquor store, I grabbed ol' Mr. Dickel for no other reason than fond nostalgia. But I tell you what: A bonfire on a cool New England night, a cigar, some friends and George Dickel No. 8 works just fine." Beau Sturm, bartender and co-owner of Trina's Starlite Lounge and Parlor Sports

LAZY SUNDAY

"My favorite thing to do on Sunday is cook a dinner at home. Especially in the winter months, when I can do a long slow braise and just lounge with my family. I like Black Maple Hill ($47, Boston Wine Exchange) for my everyday bourbon. It has Kentucky roots, small-batch size, and it's well rounded enough to match any moment. I just drop a couple of ice cubes in and let them swirl into the bourbon. The character changes dramatically over the day, and it never gets too heavy—perfect for chasing three kids and a dog." Michael Scelfo, executive chef at Russell House Tavern

SPIRIT GUIDE

A GREAT RECIPE MEANS NOTHING WITHOUT THE RIGHT INGREDIENTS. From his time behind the bar at the beloved B-Side Lounge and now at Harvard Square's First Printer, Cocktail Consultant Brother Cleve has discovered and designed a lifetime's worth of cocktails. And for every whiskey preparation, he's got the right distillation for the job.

MANHATTAN

2½ oz. Rittenhouse
1 oz. Cinzano Rosso (sweet vermouth)
2 dashes Angostura bitters

RITTENHOUSE RYE 100 PROOF

Always stirred, never shaken, for his Manhattans, Cleve uses the heat of this straight rye to balance the sweetness of the vermouth. A name with some legacy, Rittenhouse disappeared decades ago but was reintroduced in 2005, helping to create what Cleve deems "the rise of the ryes," as the grain continues to increase in popularity.

$24 at The Urban Grape,
303 Columbus Ave., Boston (857-250-2509) theurbangrape.com

WHISKEY SOUR

2 oz. Old Fitzgerald
1 oz. lemon juice
½ oz. simple syrup
¼ oz. orange juice
shake with one egg white

OLD FITZGERALD BOURBON

For this classic, Cleve goes old-school with an egg white and grabs a whiskey with some vigor at 100 proof. "Because of the higher proof and the pepperiness to it, it helps tame the citrus, which can overwhelm a spirit."

$16.50 at Martignetti Liquors,
1650 Soldiers Field Road, Brighton (617-782-3700) martignettiliquors.net

MINT JULEP

Dissolve 1 sugar cube with 2 dashes Angostura bitters
Add water
Add and gently bruise mint leaves

Fill with crushed ice
Add 3 oz. Evan Williams Single Barrel Vintage
Stir and garnish with mint and a metal straw

EVAN WILLIAMS SINGLE BARREL VINTAGE

For this frigid and sugary refreshment, Cleve uses a bourbon that's a little rough around the edges. "Derby Day has become a big holiday in the bartending world," says Cleve. "Bars have started having derby parties, and if they have the wherewithal, they'll show the race."

VARIETAL'S THE SPICE OF LIFE

GOOD THINGS COME IN THREES

FANCIED BY CHRISTOPHER Columbus and lauded by William Shakespeare, sherry is a beverage that's stood the test of time. No time like the present to test it yourself. Tuesday nights at Tres Gatos provide an opportunity for the adventurous to sample three one-ounce pours of the Spanish vino. Though made from only three grape varieties found in just three cities of the country's southern region, the ancient drink is extremely versatile, a whole world of wine within a protected designation of origin. Plus, this JP tapas bar pairs each tasting with small plates, cooking up new couplings every week, so that you can experience a hint of Andalusian sun, soil and vine, right here in Boston.

SARAH HAGMAN

Tres Gatos hosts sherry tastings Tuesday nights, 5:30–10 pm, $15, 470 Centre St., Jamaica Plain (617-477-4851) tresgatosjp.com.

Holy Wit

Altar Ego Gangsters, nuns and disco balls: Those are the conceptual pillars of Sister Act. Based on the hit movie starring Whoopi Goldberg, this rendition, set in 1970s Philadelphia, is significantly more lively than your average Sunday Mass. After witnessing a murder, nightclub singer Deloris Van Cartier disguises herself as a convent choir director, and, while in hiding, she has to learn to get along with her stodgy cohorts. The upshot is raucous song and groovy dance. Wear your Sunday best to the Tony-nominated musical running at the Boston Opera House Jan. 22–Feb. 3.

Teach Him a Lesson

Love and Murray

After Bottle Rocket and before The Royal Tenenbaums, there was Rushmore, Wes Anderson's exploration of friendship and fallout. It's a comedy about a prep-school sophomore who bonds with a wealthy industrialist, played by Bill Murray in a career-changing turn. Enter a love interest in the form of a first-grade instructor, and their friendship is tested when the old man finds he's hot for teacher, too. Owen Wilson, who was expelled from prep school himself, teams up with Anderson to spin this clever yarn of class, expulsion and teenage pain. Watch these frenemies battle it out at the Coolidge Corner Theatre on Jan. 28.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Central Park Five ★★ ½ Ravaged by the crack epidemic, New York City in the late 1980s was a powder keg of racial unrest. Anyone around at the time will remember the case of a female jogger, savagely raped and beaten within an inch of her life in Central Park, and the five black and Latino teenagers convicted of the heinous crime. Fewer folks know that these boys were innocent. A serial rapist stepped forward and confessed in 2002, after the convicted had already served lengthy prison terms. PBS mainstay Ken Burns, codirecting with his daughter and his son-in-law, is an unlikely choice for such incendiary material, and the film feels weirdly muted regarding this gross miscarriage of justice. It's a polite, empathetic movie that contains a lot of valuable information but little anger. The crooked cops, overzealous prosecutors and reckless media sensationalists all get off easy, as the movie's focus is on sadness and not rage. I wish Spike Lee had directed it instead. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villian. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rot-gut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

The Guilt Trip ★★ Far and away the mildest film in theaters right now, Anne Fletcher's love letter to nagging Jewish mothers boasts a surprisingly layered performance from Barbra Streisand but little else. It's a 90-minute wisp of a road trip starring Seth Rogen as a bumbling chemist who invented an environmentally sustainable cleaning solution. Since the movie takes place in an alternate universe where nobody uses the Internet, he has to drive cross-country pitching his product to skeptical distributors. For reasons that don't make much sense, he brings along his doting mother (Streisand) who embarrasses him at every turn. Toned way down from Fockers territory, Streisand plays a lonely widow who lives through her son and beams with pride at his remarkable underachievements. She's got a coupon for everything and can't stop fixing his hair or straightening his tie. Fletcher, who previously helmed The Proposal and 27 Dresses, keeps the filmmaking as unremarkable as possible. The Guilt Trip is pleasant, which will probably be enough for its target audience. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Hitchcock ★ ½ Stupid and insulting, director Sasha Gervasi's cartoonish look behind the scenes at the making of Psycho casts Anthony Hopkins as the master of suspense, burying the actor beneath several tons of gooey prosthetic makeup and a ridiculous fat suit. It's like watching someone try to act with their head wrapped in silly putty. Not that it matters much, as Gervasi and screenwriter John J. McLaughlin can't be bothered to even feign interest in the actual nuts and bolts of Hitchcock's craft. They instead opt for a silly, tabloid farce that depicts the director as a creepy peeping tom living out his murderous sexual fantasies through imaginary conversations with serial killer Ed Gein (Michael Wincott.) Hitch gets it in his head that his wife Alma (Helen Mirren) is cheating on him with Danny Houston's pompous windbag, and the ensuing tiresome dysfunction comes complete with groaningly obvious inside jokes for movie buffs every five minutes or so. I'd rather be watching Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, and when was the last time anybody said that? (At Kendall Square.)

Hyde Park On Hudson ★★ Following the soggy playbook of last year's equally dismissible My Week with Marilyn, director Roger Michell's Hyde Park on Hudson supposedly chronicles the momentous first meeting of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt and Britain's King George VI, but all that's just background noise. Really, the movie is about how FDR's dowdy distant cousin, Daisy Suckley (Laura Linney), had a schoolgirl crush on the commander-in-chief. In an improbable bit of casting, Bill Murray plays FDR. He's canny enough to understand that we're never going to forget we're watching Bill Murray, so he doesn't try an impersonation and just keeps his chin tilted up while slightly affecting an accent. It's a pretty good performance with a fair amount of mystery preserved behind his smiling eyes. But alas, we're soon back to Daisy's sappy romantic woes, and the none-too-shocking revelation that's she's not the only lucky lady to get up-close-and-personal with the president. Taking great pains to remain inoffensive, Hyde Park wears its slightness on its sleeve. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Impossible ★★ ½ J.A. Bayona's true tale of a vacationing family torn asunder by the 2004 tsunami is stunningly crafted and motion sickness inducing. The film has no shortage of shocks and a pummeling, visceral approach to the horrors of this natural disaster. Ewan McGregor and Naomi Watts star as a couple of happy, wealthy parents split up in the storm who wander wounded through the wreckage and relief camps with their children in tow. Bayona, who helmed a nifty little thriller called The Orphanage a few years back, stresses the sheer physicality of their ordeal. The gravely battered Watts gives a performance of stirring grit, and the sheer brutality of it all might account for why Bayona overcompensates with maudlin schmaltz and a syrupy, over-insistent score. However admirable from a storytelling perspective, the narrow focus gives short shrift to the millions of other victims, lending to the unpleasant idea that this historic calamity was just something that ruined a white family's vacation. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jack Reacher ★★★ Working from One Shot, the ninth novel in Lee Child's inexhaustible but readable series, writer/director Christopher McQuarrie sticks a never droller Tom Cruise in the convoluted case of a Pittsburgh sniper who may or may not have been framed. As typical of Child's tales, the title character meticulously pores over the evidence with an almost Asberger-ish focus, openly insulting the local authorities while periodically mopping the floor with folks dumb enough to start bare-knuckle brawls. There's a pulpy zing to the dialogue, with some serious belly laughs arising from Reacher's blasé understatements and lightning quick displays of superhuman strength. It could all easily seem like a silly exercise in movie star ego gratification if Cruise and McQuarrie didn't approach the material with just the right touch of humor. Jack Reacher is a deliberately lo-fi, old-school detective yarn that at its best feels like a really good episode of a '70s television show. That's fine with me. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but, if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, under-populated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Promised Land ★★ Matt Damon is such an effortlessly compelling, low-key screen presence, I'd follow him anywhere. That includes this picture, despite Promised Land being a disappointing, painfully earnest, social issues melodrama. In a tale penned by the star and fellow Boston native John Krasinski, Damon and the invaluable Frances McDormand play representatives of a multinational natural gas conglomerate who arrive in a deliberately unnamed farm town attempting to lease the land for fracking purposes. Krasinski is the backwards-baseball-cap-and-cargo-shorts–wearing environmentalist who teams up with Hal Holbrook's community leader for a lot of long-winded lectures. Director Gus Van Sant does his best to shade these proceedings with an admirable appreciation for everyday life, and it's a testament to his casual mastery that the movie ever feels like anything more than a glorified PowerPoint presentation. Our loyalties are instantly lopsided, as Damon is a born movie star while John Krasinski is a tall geeky guy from television. I spent the entire time rooting for the bad guy. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel Silver Linings Playbook into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of "edginess." It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her police officer husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

This Is 40 ★★ Clearly aspiring to be the John Cassavetes of penis jokes, writer/director Judd Apatow turns inward for This Is 40, a semi-autobiographical sprawl with some honest moments strewn about the shapeless bickering. Paul Rudd and Leslie Mann reprise their roles as the devoted but dissatisfied married couple who stole Apatow's 2007 surprise smash Knocked Up. It's probably not the savviest move at this moment in the zeitgeist to try and elicit sympathy for wealthy folks living beyond their means. (Let's just say that Apatow's idea of financial distress is a good deal comfier than my own experience.) The meandering first hour and a half of this absurdly overlong movie successfully depicts the day-to-day grind of family life, unflinchingly chronicling all the temper tantrums, petty slights and lack of privacy that come with any prolonged cohabitation. The rougher parts are salvaged only by a sublime turn from Albert Brooks. Apatow's honesty is commendable, but after 134 minutes you'll wish he'd kept some things to himself. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Space Jams

It only took one viral tweet. Then Walk the Moon drew a too-big crowd to a very small bar, winning themselves face-painted fans, a record deal and a debut album. That's just the beginning of the group's story. Named after the Police's 1979 hit single, the band churns out a high-energy sound with beats so infectious that Esquire declared the Ohio natives' youthful anthem "Anna Sun" a song that everyone should know. After touring the music festival circuit and sharing a stage with Young the Giant and fun., the group is rocketing skyward. Next up? The Paradise Rock Club. Wear your moon boots on Jan. 24.

Epic Proportions

Lauren Cotton has an eye for architecture. In Solo 2013, the Connecticut artist reinterprets perceptions of space, using adhesive-backed vinyl, interior latex paints and paper to create three-dimensional installations from two-dimensional objects. Her two-dimensional works, on the other hand, use color to push away from the page and cross spatial boundaries. Expand your horizons at the Bromfield Gallery through Jan. 26.

We salute Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

BISTRO DU MIDI [272 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-426-7878, bistrodumidi.com] Bistro du Midi showcases authentic Provencal cuisine in a warm, welcoming, and beautiful setting. Inspired by the ingredients and culinary techniques of the Midi region in France, Executive Chef, Robert Sisca presents modern, ingredient-driven creations that are at once refined and approachable. From a carefully conceived charcuterie selection to the freshest seafood, meats and vegetables, Bistro du Midi brings the simple, clean and bold flavors of Provence to Boston.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

Beer Specialty

CHILD'S PLAY

Pocket Pool at Your Peril

You didn't need to be a kid to go, "Whoa!" when you saw the Lego city constructed in the Westin Copley where the cocktail reception took place for Room to Grow's gala. And that was just one of the delights in a thoroughly delightful evening.

The event kicked off with drinks, little things to nibble on, and (arranged around the Lego metropolis) a silent auction that included visits to The Daily Show and The Colbert Report, a Chicago Cubs game as a guest of GM Theo Epstein, an autographed Aerosmith guitar and your own ice cream truck for a day.

Among the über-high-wattage crowd: Red Sox great Lou Merloni and his stunning other half, Steffanie, sight for sore eyes Kristina Lyons and the ever-affable Patrick, mustachioed muchacho Sherif Nada and the flawless Mary, head honcha Saskia Epstein and her dreamboat husband, Paul, genetic lottery winners Nicole and Jeff Bellows, legal power couple Thalia and Steve Sugarman, No. 1 Red Sox devotee Carolyn Casey, Hingham's royal highness Kerry Brett and the rakish Danny Gallagher, TV journalism's answer to Nick and Nora Charles, Mary Richardson and Stan Leven, gala cochair Charlie Baker, and the evening's honorees, Tamara Santiago and Paul Grogan, to name a mere smattering.

Following dinner, there was a live auction that was strictly for high-rollers, and it was the auction that prompted the evening's funniest remark.

Upon arrival, guests were issued what looked like an iPhone but was, in fact, an electronic bidding device that was James Bond badass but also a little intimidating.

As one man put it, while storing it in his trouser pocket: "Great. I rearrange myself once, and I'll end up spending $1,000."

Not Yo' Daddy's Winter Ball

Who knew you could take a long-standing but somewhat stuffy Brahmin tradition and sex it up?

The reboot of the Winter Ball, held at the Copley Plaza to raise money for the Discovery Ensemble, managed to do just that. Alongside the debutantes and grandes dames, there was a Baywatch babe, gaggles of gay boys who would've fit right in at Oscar Wilde's wildest debauch, artists, bohemians and more hipsters than you could shake a shillelagh at.

Justin and Krissy Oliver and Nicole and Jeff Bellows at the Room to Grow gala

Lou and Steffanie Merloni at the Room to Grow gala

Kristina Lyons and Thalia Sugarman at the Room to Grow gala

Brett Jackson, Alexander Hall, Devlin Hughes, Thomas Tessier and David Rowe at the Winter Ball

The "amazing necklace and ring combo"

The dance began late, so everyone had a chance to lubricate beforehand, which made it all the more jovial. Partying like it was Prince Orlov's Palace: the smokingly hot Eric Levin, the whippet thin Devin Hill squiring bodacious TV star (and Cambridge native) Traci Bingham, wildly entertaining Web designer Tony DeMarco, blue-blooded figure skater Elin Gardiner Schran and her dead-sexy husband, Steve, the bewitchingly beautiful Chynna Pope, the eternally handsome Paul Miller, Chappaquiddnik Justin Dangel, prepster par excellence Woody Tunnicliffe with the fetching Mary Kinsela, blonde bombshell Ligia Buzan, pretty in pink Leslie Parris Kwan, and so on and so forth down the city's all-ages A-list.

> "I'm wearing custom and H&M—high and low. Oh, who am I kidding? I'm just high."

There was definitely dancing, not to mention drinking, laughing, flirting and folderol, but what made it especially fun were the choice comments, among them:

When complimented on her gown, a woman said, "This old thing? It's brand new."

The girl who said, "My date went outside to get some air. Thank God for gay boys."

And the man who said, "I'm wearing custom and H&M—high and low. Oh, who am I kidding? I'm just high."

Contest of the Month

The first reader to guess which of Boston's best-dressed socialites was sporting this amazing necklace and ring combo at a recent gala will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which may not be as chic but at least it doesn't require a trip to Prague to acquire. ✖✖✖

Art? Craft? Entertainment.

Picture a fine dining restaurant, 2013. Pendant lights, exposed wood, once-brutalist lines softened into farmhouse chic. In the open kitchen, sous chefs hunch over the radishes, their concentration so intense that the steam rising from their ears forms a respectable nimbus. There's the server with her tattoo of Julia Child's face, her frightening knowledge of regional mushrooms. Cocktails are bespoke ("I'd like a Peruvian spin on the Sazerac, but make it wistful,"), the butter's house-churned and the menu's so precious it's printed on vellum reclaimed from a medieval Irish codex.

Adam DeTour

There's been some backlash, of late, against this cultivated cult, the elevation of food into the vault of sanctity. The argument is that food has become too intimidating, and chefs too tyrannical, so that a $200 meal is now as fun as a dose of norovirus.

Perhaps. And it does seem, sometimes, that the only requirement to be a celebrity chef is to suffer a televised defilement by Gordon Ramsay. But recall that the original celebrity chef was named Boyardee, and he sold high-sodium mush. I'd prefer some arrogant jerk who at least knows his way around a porchetta. The fact is that chefs take food so seriously because even toddlers nowadays demand that their morning Cheerios be prepared sous vide. This is a good thing. It adds variety to life, and keeps people's minds off the fact that the planet is parboiling into a toxic lump.

Our cover subject, the talented Kristen Kish, is no stranger to food as entertainment, having starred in this season's Top Chef.

BREAKING BREAD IS more than just tradition for Vojin Vujosevic—it's his business. "Bread has always been our passion," says Vujosevic, who founded Pain D'Avignon with three childhood friends more than 20 years ago in Hyannis. "Growing up in Belgrade, Serbia, great bread was a part of everyday life."

After coming to the States for school in 1986, Vujosevic chose to stay on account of the Yugoslav Wars. Bread is the center of the Serbian family meal, but Vujosevic saw a lack of options in his adopted home. So, even though he wasn't a baker, he and his friends founded a Cape Cod bakery that now carries 200 different varieties, annually producing nearly three million pounds of artisan breads, rolls, pastries and specialty crackers. Pain D'Avignon uses Old World methods—many of their loaves are made en couche, in rough woven linen that preserves flavor and moisture. Natural ingredients like stone-ground whole-wheat flour, sea salt, wild flower honey and Greek olive oil make for breads that are "like the top-quality loaves coming out of European ovens for ages," says Vujosevic. "Intense flavor, a perfect crumb and a crackling crust."

To celebrate the bakery's 20th anniversary last year, Pain D'Avignon introduced the Bread of the Month Club, which ships seasonally selected breads—like February's heart-shaped loaf, sweetened with pieces of dark chocolate and enriched by whole hazelnuts—to households across the country. Cold-weather carb-loading has never been easier.

Good Eats

Sage Advice

Sycamore chef Lydia Reichert's agnolotti isn't a work of ingenuity. (For that, order the grilled squid with beans, cardoons and crispy olives next time it's on the menu.) Her classic Piedmontese dish impresses with its perfect execution. Reichert grinds chicken, pork, rabbit and duck together, and dollops the rich, tender mixture between sheets of hand-rolled dough. The stamp-sized pillows are then sauced with an ultra-savory jus rendered from roasted duck bones. It's the attention to detail this dish needs, and, finally, the caliber of cooking sleepy Newton Centre has been waiting for.

JUST FLU IN

TO THE MANY BOSTONIANS WHO SNEEZED ON ME THIS WEEK: I'm not crazy about the idea of catching this flu. The fact that I have had two different women sneeze directly into my face (and one little girl sneeze on my legs) during one walk to the grocery store this week leads me to believe that the people of this city want me in the hospital. The sidewalks of downtown Boston are not so narrow that you need to use me as your tissue, and I'm going through too much hand sanitizer.

Sneeze magnet

To Jeremy Jacobs: You're an ahole. You were an architect of the lockout, slow to apologize to fans and your main way of giving back? A coupon for one free concession and discounted merchandise at the home opener. The catch? The base price for tickets is $80 this season. You just made back whatever you would've lost on the halfhearted giveaways. Hockey is a huge part of my life, and thanks to your lack of caring for your team's fans, I, and likely many others, can't afford to go to a game this season, or for probably several seasons, if this trend continues. I want you to know for sure how at least one person who pays your salary feels about you.

Myles Tandy

To those responsible for window displays on Newbury Street: Maybe you've got your iPhone weather app still set to the tropical island where you spent the holidays, but last I checked, it's 25 degrees in Boston, with a wind chill of 13. Those coral cropped pants and sleeveless blouses you're peddling won't quite cut it. Can you direct me to the rack of knit scarves and thermal long johns?

Chilly city chick

To college students who decide to throw parties on Thursday nights: I know what a Thirsty Thursday is. I went to college in Boston. But, in the real world, Thirsty Thursdays don't really exist. I don't appreciate hearing you guys attempt to sing Ke$ha in the alley outside of my window when I've already set my alarm for 7 o'clock. In fact, listening to Ke$ha at any time of the day is unacceptable. Go and get an internship.

YEAR OF THE DRAGON

According to the Chinese calendar, the year of the water dragon happens once every 60 years. And once every 15 years, Ming Tsai opens a restaurant (or so he says). These cycles align as Tsai's Blue Dragon, an Asian gastropub concept, comes to the Seaport District the second week of February, just before the year of the water dragon ends.

So the team's on deadline. But the timing just adds to their excitement. "No one's done an Asian gastropub," says Tsai. "No one's tried to take that same idea of casualness and put an East/West twist to it." Executive chef Tom Woods, who's been with Tsai for 10 years and first proposed the gastropub idea, agrees. "It's really the essence of what we've been doing at Blue Ginger," he says, "but scaled back to a more approachable presentation, not at all sacrificing consistency, quality, flavor."

BLUE DRAGON 324 A St., Boston. ming.com

Blue Dragon occupies the old A Street Diner space, a single-story standalone, which is rare in Fort Point. But it won't be hard to find. Just look for the dragon weathervane on the roof, meant to direct the restaurant's energy flow upward (a recommendation from Tsai's feng shui master).

Inside, the walls are half exposed brick, half restored barn side, with a bar as large as the open kitchen. There's seating for 80 (mostly bar height), a communal table, one large booth—"the power table," says Tsai—and a permit for 16 sidewalk seats. Downstairs, a second kitchen will be exclusively used for to-go orders, catering to the bustling lunch crowds of the Seaport. An online system ensures quick pickups and sports a separate to-go menu, composed of only those items that carry well, such as the banh mi. On crusty Iggy's bread, the sandwich comes in the traditional pork, lemongrass chicken or vegetarian with mushroom pâté.

"We've really seen the evolution of the way people eat," says general manager Sarah Livesy, who's also been with Tsai for a decade. "It's less structured and restricted. Food's about sharing and the community and the conversation and the experience."

"It's the way chefs like to eat, too," adds Woods. As a result, Tsai and Woods will offer blackboard specials, platters and small plates for sharing that illustrate an Asian take on traditional pub fare. The shepherd's pie, for instance, has lamb curry complemented by toasted coconut, Gruyère and Parmesan. The fish and chips, too, are original. "We tried 17 versions," says Tsai, "and we probably took a potato farm out, the amount of testing we did on French fries." They decided on a panko-crusted fillet served with black vinegar aioli and fries—soaked, twice blanched and fried with a few steps in between. "We're not going to tell you our secret," says Tsai, noting they took a tip from longtime friend Guy Fieri.

Drinks include two wines on tap—one of which is local. But the most exciting cocktail is the Dragon Bowl. Served in a traditional Chinese clay pot, this 48-ounce passion fruit Mai Tai comes loaded with an ice volcano that fires up as many—or as few—straws as you'd like. "It's fun," says Tsai. "Although I can't guarantee you won't wake up with a hangover."

HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

Q&A

IF THE STEW FITS

Chef Dave Becker signs copies of Stewed: A Collection of Soups, Braises, and Stews from Sweet Basil at Wellesley Books on Feb. 2.

What's the most important soup for an amateur cook to learn?

I'm going to say that they're all really approachable, but the one that you might want to stay clear of, until you at least get a knack for it, are the braised meats. The easiest ones are the cold soups because a lot of them actually don't even require any cooking—you need a blender. If you overcook the veal shank or an osso buco, they'll just fall off the bone and you have a stew. Maybe puréed soups, too, because you don't really mess around with the texture.

You incorporate sweet items such as watermelon and cantaloupe in some of your soups. How do you still make them savory?

If you add salt, black pepper and acid to them, and maybe some raw onions, the sweetness and the flavor are the main components, but your mind is already thinking appetizer or a salad kind of a thing. The watermelon gazpacho was a dish that we had on the menu last summer, and it was pretty crazy how well it took off. We didn't even take it off the menu [until] late September. People kept coming in to get it one last time. They'd be like, "Are you going to take it off?" I'm like, "The leaves are falling on the ground."

Design and photography are huge components of the cookbook. What was the idea behind the layout?

The food and the recipes were the excuse to do the book, but a lot of the photography was the reason for the book. But then, as we started to look at some of the pictures, we were thinking they might look cooler spread out. Also, when you flip open a book like that, it stays open when you're using it. These kind of lie flat, so if the soup that you're cooking is on page 12, you can flip it open, and it'll just stay there. I told the guy making it, "Is there any way you could make it so it floats?" It'd have a funny feel, but then if it ever fell into a pot of soup, it'd be really buoyant. He basically, within five seconds, was like, "I don't think that's in your price range." "Fine, we'll just shoot to make it waterproof."

POP SMART

Her name is Naomi Cannistraci, but you may know her as the Popover Lady. The nickname comes courtesy of the small (but surging) customer base that flocks to her market appearances. Along with rich and eggy originals, the Melrose native offers popovers laced with asiago cheese, dunked head-first into chocolate or dusted with orange-cinnamon sugar. (She makes a mean morello cherry pie, too.) When it comes to baked goods, the Popover Lady goes above and beyond.

ELIZABETH BOMZE

Drink of the Moment

Fully Aromatic

NAME: Grappa Acida

INGREDIENTS: Alexander Grappa di Moscato Veneto, Dimmi Liquore, Aperol, rosemary, egg white, grapefruit, lemon and lime

INVENTOR: Matt Coughlin, Cinquecento restaurant beverage director

CONCEIT: An Italian pisco sour. "We're trying to bring in Italian liqueurs that are underutilized," says Coughlin of the Roman trattoria's bar program. "Esoteric stuff off the beaten path."

WHAT THIS MEANS: A marriage of the velvet froth of egg white with the aromatics of Italian liqueurs. So there's an emphasis on the herbal.

FLAVOR: A soft-footed entry in the pisco canon, as smooth as a well-cut Italian suit. The egg white leavens the grapefruit's acid nip, while the Dimmi adds a whiff of nebbiolo grape. Aperol gives it a needed touch of earth, and there's a ting of stone fruit in the nose, along with a fleck of evergreen rosemary. Fresh citrus washes the slate clean in the aftertaste. This is a grappa drink for those put off by the liquor's reputation as a stomach-cleansing digestif, and a pisco drink for those who dislike sours.

CONSIDER IT A GATEWAY: Cinquecento's library of amaros, Italian herbal liqueurs, is second to none. "We're expanding to have over 30 amaros, pretty much every one you can get in Massachusetts," says Coughlin.

PAIR IT WITH: Coughlin acknowledges that food and wine are a better coupling, but considering the drink's mouthfeel and flavor profile, he'd suggest the ricotta fresca or the octopus salad.

GRAPPA-PHOBIC?: The bar program is aggressively seasonal, so recipes change with the availability of ingredients. "We approach it like the pastry program, whatever's freshest and most flavorable." An upcoming drink involves tangerine, kaffir lime, blood orange, kumquat and lemongrass. There's also an emphasis on bespoke cocktails. Says Coughlin, "We're not messing around."

Eat Your Words

Ever had a chicken breast that tasted like a summer's day? Food criticism can be a mouthful. Pick which line actually occurred in a recent Boston restaurant review:

1. On porchetta arrosto at Cinquecento

a. "A staggering overload of piggy goodness."
b. "Like a deconstructed hot dog in which the meats have been put back in their original places."
c. "The elevation of pig to near-divine sublimity."

2. On noodles at Shojo

a. "An earthy collection of savory worms, inching their briny, nutty way to your mouth."
b. "Topped with an Asian omelet, the noodles look as though they've been the victim of an egging."
c. "A dish of noodles, shrimp, peanuts, and sprouts is cloaked in a web of omelet, like pad Thai wearing an egg hairnet."

3. On New England clam chowder at Asana

a. "Ariel meets Sebastian and finds her sea legs—this chowder shines!"
b. "Evocative of a satisfying day on the ocean."
c. "Salted just so, like the surf on Marconi Beach."

4. On seasonal mushroom risotto at City Landing

a. "A hardy and comforting dish with a velvety mouth feel."
b. "So velvety, it's as though a Victorian frock were draped across your tongue."
c. "Lightly leathery but strangely satisfying, like a hug from an over-tanned woman."

5. On mushrooms "under glass" at Kitchen

a. "It'd find a home in the Little Shop of Horrors, but not in my dinner plans."
b. "The presentation really put the 'fun' back in 'alarming fungoid growth.'"
c. "Looks like something from a 19th-century specimen lab."

FUNNY FEELING

While we dread the seemingly inevitable appearance of barbed wire, there's no denying textured polishes are trending. Ciaté has nailed it before with its caviar manicure, but for those who find that fishy, here are some other materials that will leave your digits looking sharp.

Shiny

If you're easily distracted by shiny objects, Ciaté's Very Colorfoil Manicure is one way to ensure you'll never stay focused. The three-part kit includes a kaleidoscope of tinsel-textured colors, and makes fingers as flashy as a sheet of Reynolds Wrap. Paint on Ciaté's accompanying nail pot, add the glue, and layer the foils for an attention-grabbing effect.

Grainy

Pop queen Mariah Carey's new line for OPI introduces the world to Liquid Sand Lacquer, four shimmering colors that leave your nails with a grainy look made for glamour, not smoothing down a baseboard. With a regular nail polish application, the unique consistency of the glitter particles creates a rough, and dare we say, sex-on-the-beach-esque look.

Fuzzy

You don't have to be in line for the throne to give your fingers the royal treatment. Ciaté's Velvet Manicure creates a soft, somewhat fuzzy, texture that feels like a piece of tapestry inside Windsor Castle. Apply two coats of polish, sprinkle on the velvet powder, and brush off any excess with the kit's little black brush. You'll be left with regal, elegant fingers fit for a jubilee.

ROUND TRIP

Two projects breaking new ground

MASSIMO TIBERI, of the open-any-day-now Aria Trattoria in the North End, says owning his own restaurant is like coming "full circle." That's because the venue—the second floor of 253 Hanover St., most recently home to Marco Cucina Romana—was once the elegant Trattoria Scalinatella, where Tiberi worked a number of jobs.

Eventually, he became general manager at Tresca down the block. He also became a father to a daughter named Aria (the restaurant's namesake, of course). Tiberi says he'll draw on both experiences at his new place. "I'll be working the front of the house, doing whatever it takes," he promises. As for the back, chef Clayton Gonsalves will run the same kitchen where he served as a sous chef for Marco. The menu will feature lots of pastas with an Abbruzzese accent to reflect Tiberi's family's history. Expect the likes of lamb spiedini and a porchetta special every Saturday.

SPRING BRINGS SOMETHING LONG-WISHED-FOR TO ARLINGTON: the town's "first real bar," according to Billy Lyons. The Menotomy Grill and Tavern is slated to open in April on Mass. Ave. As the owner, Lyons burnished his cocktail cred as general manager of Stoddard's Fine Food & Ale in Downtown Crossing. He pledges a "unique cocktail list, craft beers and cask ale," in addition to a well-chosen wine list. Although he has yet to hire a chef, Lyons anticipates a menu featuring reasonably priced dishes like pulled-pork sandwiches, burgers and roast chicken. Also on tap: 130 parking spaces.

Wine

Otherworldly

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

Cabernet franc, sometimes referred to as "the other cabernet," may fly under the radar, but it's one of the most food-compatible reds. Aromatic, bright, herbaceous and juicy, it's actually far more versatile than the superstar with which it shares a name. One of cabernet franc's most appealing attributes is affordability. Since it's not in fashion, prices are generally reasonable. The following are exemplary wines that play beautifully with a wide range of dishes.

CHÂTEAU COUDRAY MONTPENSIER, CHINON LOIRE VALLEY, FRANCE, 2010 ($17, BRIX WINE SHOP) From the magical village of Chinon, this wine is savory and peppery, with notes of sage, dill and wildflowers. It has a lushness and angular acidity that would pair well with dishes incorporating tomatoes. Aged in a combination of stainless steel and wood, it's well structured but vibrantly fruity. A distinctive black olive note suggests an accompaniment to grilled fish with tapenade.

DOMAINE BERNARD BAUDRY, CHINON "LES GRANGES" LOIRE VALLEY, FRANCE, 2011 ($18, WHOLE FOODS, CAMBRIDGE) This outstanding biodynamic family domaine produces a number of cabernet francs from their property in the Central Loire. This wine shows vibrant colors with an enticing perfume of dried cherries, charcuterie and mushrooms. Flavors are mineral-accented and earthy with tart, spicy raspberry as the dominant note and an interesting undertone of green olive. This is a red screaming for a fish stew, particularly one inspired by the cuisine of Provence.

HERMANN J. WIEMER CABERNET FRANC, SENECA LAKE, N.Y., 2009 ($22, WOLLASTON WINE & SPIRITS) For me, a top cabernet franc is all about a quiet but lingering finish. This full-bodied wine from a premier Upstate New York producer is cab franc in a more muscular mode. Its edgy dill and thyme-accented red fruit flavor combines with a smoky finish to place it more in the Bordeaux tradition, but with greater accessibility at a young age. It would be an ideal choice for grilled tuna or chicken, particularly if either were rubbed with herbs.

Talking Snack

In honor of February being National Snack Food Month, here are some local chefs' high-end renditions of the high-fructose corn-syrup goodies you swore off this New Year. If you're going to indulge, get your calories' worth.

Nutter Butter

At Sweet Cheeks, diners can stuff their faces with this super-sized, shareable dessert. How super-sized? "He held it up to his head and it covered the whole thing," says chef/owner Tiffani Faison, speaking of a (very thrilled) three-year-old guest. Adults will also go nuts for this softer, chewier version of the lunchbox classic.

Pop Tart

Five years ago, Tremont 647 added its own twist to this lazy breakfast staple for its "pajama brunch." Now a regular item on the menu, the recipe changes every week to feature seasonal ingredients. "We all secretly love them," chef/owner Andy Husbands explains, "but we know we shouldn't buy them." And his German chocolate cake with coconut rendition is better than anything that can ever emerge from a box.

Oreo

The world's top-selling cookie is a hard act to follow, but the Oreos at Flour Bakery take the cake. You can thank Joanne Chang's parents for never having sweets in the house for the inspiration behind these superior sandwich cookies. Baked fresh every day, they're not as crunchy as the original, but that shouldn't stop you from twisting and dunking them.

Cotton Candy

Sprinkled with Pop Rocks, this green apple treat is complimentary at the end of every meal at Lolita Cocina and Tequila Bar. According to general manager Joe Barone, sugar-spun mustaches ensue because, "when cotton candy is on the table, everybody becomes a little kid."

THE WRITE WAY

IN A MARRIAGE OF MINDS, these two men worked together for decades at the literarily aristocratic Atlantic. Editor Todd oversaw writer Kidder's articles and books. His subtly inquiring voice offered counterpoint, criticism and support in a process they describe from their respective, simpatico perspectives.

The book moves onto the subjects of narratives, essays and memoirs. They discuss the wiggly "reality" of the first-person narrator. Hence, Tim O'Brien's memoir about Vietnam may be less authentic than his novel about the same subject, the celebrated The Things They Carried. Through fiction, a writer can stand on an unsettlingly personal perch and look warily at his understanding of his own experiences.

Good Prose: The Art of Nonfiction
By Tracy Kidder and Richard Todd

Kidder lives in Massachusetts.

Kidder and Todd are like two professors in a cozy university library exploring the way writers (Updike, Didion, Woolf) create and transform meaning in their work. Their swirling discussions consider styles and voices, and the infinitely varied ways in which writers construct a story. As for their own literary relationship, there's a kind of C.A.T.-scan quality to the process, a nearly mystical mutuality. "Editing isn't just something that happens to you," observes Kidder. "You have to learn how to be an editor." ✖✖✖

"I came to The Atlantic in the fall of 1969, three or four years before Kidder hove into view. He remembers me in those days as a tweedy, venerable, proto-curmudgeon. I remember myself as a skinny, bookish, and tentative youth, and I think an objective observer at the time would have sided with me."

ROAD TO RUINS

MAKE BELIZE See the wondrous sites in the Chiquibul Rain Forest.

"MY SURNAME?" SAYS the guide on his way to the Actun Tunichil Muknal cave. He fingers his machete before grinning widely. "It's Warrior." This is Belize, and it begins where the world ends—Mayan apocalypse or not.

Known for its lush landscapes, which include jungles, rainforests, pine forests and Caribbean beaches, Belize has a history made rich in part by the Mayans, who thrived here for the better part of three millennia and still live in its villages today. Nearly two-thirds of the Cayo District, some two hours by car from the airport, consists of national parks and reserves.

This area is also where the jungle thickens; where mist-covered tree lines join ancient ruins and where underground caves are filled with dripping stalactites and bat guano. Here is where howler monkeys are an eerie early morning alarm, croaking deep in the jungle, maybe miles away. Maybe only feet. It's hard to tell.

Here, in the denseness of the Cayo, is where you settle, deep in the Mountain Pine Ridge Forest Reserve at Gaïa Riverlodge. Gaïa greets each guest with a juice made of fresh papaya, watermelon, lime, mango, orange and other fruits. Sixteen private cabanas dot the property, decked with thatch roofs, luxuriously plush beds and screens in place of windows. Two of the cabanas and the main lodge, with its open-air two-story dining deck and screened-in dining room, overlook the Five Sisters Waterfall, which produces 95 percent of the eco-friendly resort's electricity.

For your first full day, book the Caracol tour directly with Gaïa's managers. The trek puts you deep in the neighboring Chiquibul Rain Forest at Belize's largest, most important Mayan site. The drive there reveals why it earned the nickname "snail" or "conch" after its discovery in 1936—the road, it seems, is composed solely of curves.

The bumpy journey is worth it, however. Transformed into a tourist destination in the early 2000s, the archaeological site boasts limestone pyramids so tall that a person at the base appears to be the size of a thumbnail when viewed from the summit.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Climb the ladder to the side of Barton Creek Cave and jump 25 feet into the river for an extra thrill.

Fear of heights? Opt for a tour of the Green Hills Butterfly Farm instead of zip-lining.

Take Gaïa's tram or walk the 300 steps down to the Five Sisters Waterfall and relax in shaded hammocks or lounge chairs.

The ruins are organized into four main groups, with the biggest, Caana, built sometime in the seventh century. Caana stands 140 feet and is still the country's tallest manmade structure. Just above the tree line, the top of its highest temple offers the rainforest's most spectacular view.

Take it easy on day two and visit the Barton Creek Cave before exploring the canopy by zip-line. At Barton Creek, which neighbors an Amish community, a guide leads you by canoe and spotlight into what the Mayas call Xibalba, or the gateway to the underworld. At points on the journey, the stalactites, which grow at a rate of one inch per 100 years, reach so close to the water's surface that ducking low in the canoe is the only way to avoid contact. Travel just deep enough into the seven-mile wet-cave system to see Mayan pottery and a 1,500-year-old skull believed to be the remnant of a human sacrifice to Chac, the rain god.

After a snack and water break, it's off to Calico Jack's Village for zip-lining. The three tour options range in length from 1,135 feet of cable to 2,700 feet. But each includes a 500-foot glide high above the jungle, with views so magnificent that it's tempting to slow down.

For the final day, embrace your inner Lara Croft or Indiana Jones. You're about to be a badass tomb raider. The aptly named Actun Tunichil Muknal ("Cave of the Crystal Sepulchre," or ATM cave) tops National Geographic's list of sacred caves. It's known for its Mayan artifacts, including human remains, but particularly the Crystal Maiden: an intact skeleton of a sacrificed Mayan princess, her bones shimmering with centuries of calcification.

The cave—which requires free-climbing, full submersion, swimming and shimmying—is accessible only in the company of one of the country's 21 trained, working guides. Request Patrick Warrior, who leads barefoot and makes the locals shake their heads and say, "He's crazy!" at his mention. After a 45-minute hike through the bush, stopping to look at medicinal plants, Warrior leads you across the thigh-high Roaring River (three times) to base camp. Here, all belongings are left behind. He affixes headlights to helmets then instructs you to jump into the blue-green water at the mouth of the ATM cave, swim to a boulder just inside and climb it before submerging into total darkness. It's an experience so invigorating and transcendent that neither photo—nor write-up—could do it justice. ×××

FATHER KNOWS BEST

Daddy Jones
525 Medford St., Somerville
(617-690-9095)
daddyjonesbar.com

LAMB A LOT Daddy Jones offers more than outstanding cocktails, like lamb skewers and fried zucchini.

DIMITRA TSOURIANIS IS obviously well connected. Before the Somerville native even opened her Magoun Square cocktail lounge, her friend Maria Menounos had plugged Daddy Jones as her favorite local hangout in The Improper's Boston's Best issue. Despite the celebrity endorsement—and Tsourianis' deep résumé as GM for hotspots like Alibi and Om in its heyday—her venture is thankfully devoid of flash and pretension. Instead, the attractive 35-seater is a wonderful neighborhood bar offering an approachable Greek menu and a playful cocktail list. Betting on the Green Line extension and the untapped demand for dining options in the immediate area, the candlelit lounge is already seeing its gamble pay dividends.

Her regulars, some of whom visit up to four times a week, appreciate good value, as none of the hearty dishes costs more than $14. While there were sporadic gems, the "finger foods" were the most consistent. Part of the charm of the menu, especially with the starters, is that it undersells itself. Labeled simply as pita and dip, the roasted red pepper and feta dip ($6) had a touch of honey folded in for sweetness, and the pita served alongside was fluffier than your store-bought variety. The well-seasoned fried zucchini ($6) were lightly battered and perfectly cooked irregular crescents, complemented by a skordalia dip of garlic and potatoes. The house-stuffed phyllo ($6) came as four flaky, buttery triangles filled to capacity with cheese, spinach and mushrooms.

House-smoked herring turned out to be the best thing on offer, as it went all-in on the umami. If you like anchovies on pizza or keep a bottle of fish sauce at the table, you'll want to order this non–American Heart Association–approved preparation. The fish comes as a ramekin of smoked pieces in olive oil, served with a charred wedge of lettuce drizzled with lemon, olive oil and fried capers. Unfortunately, even the most dedicated sodium fanatic needs more than a slice of toast to offset that kind of hit, so ask the accommodating wait staff for extra bread or, better yet, the house-made pita.

If the starters reliably served up confident, inspired renditions of Americanized Greek fare, the mains, classified under "fork & knife," were frustratingly unreliable. Hoping to re-experience the flavorful grilled marinated lamb skewer ($14) from a previous visit, I was disappointed by the bland version I was presented with on my return. The first time the lamb tasted of a long soak in lemon, herbs and olive oil. The second time produced a perfectly grilled lamb absent any flavor. The worst offender was the fish and fries, a standard pub favorite I ordered based on the impressive smoked herring. Apparently it's a zero-sum game with fish and salt, because the kitchen clearly used all the sodium at its disposal for the starter. The fish, thickly coated with a doughy beer batter, sat neglected after the first bite, an unfortunate misfire on an otherwise well-edited menu. A better version of a pub grub staple, the Mac Daddy ($12) was one of the cheesiest mac 'n' cheeses around. Béchamel, sharp cheddar and kasseri coated every crevice of the elbow pasta, and the sauce served as an efficient vehicle for distributing the smoke of bacon and sweetness of sautéed tomatoes.

Daddy Jones is the kind of place that draws folks in with reasonable prices and an outstanding beer and cocktail list, but keeps them coming for the food. Although not everyone dined, they were all sipping a cocktail or a Pretty Things Jack D'or ($7), one of six beers on draft. Couples and groups hovered near the slate bar while muted '80s sitcoms played on the TV overhead. Be sure to try the Bourbon Spoon ($8), a boozy homage to ya-yas who'd offer their grandchildren a spoonful of mastiha, a sweet Greek syrup made from mastic resin. The Harvey Wallbanger ($10) travels to Athens, as Ouzo replaces Galliano for a more herbal punch.

B.N.'s Picks

Pita and dip
Fried zucchini
Smoked herring
Mac Daddy

With its mishmash of wooden cuckoo clocks, backlit school lockers serving as display cases and vintage barware scattered throughout, Daddy Jones eschews sleekness for a welcoming, come-as-you-are environment. Hopefully over time, the menu will draw more on Tsourianis' Greek roots and prove more consistent. But whether the Green Line extension ever happens, Daddy Jones is already enlivening the neighborhood and putting Magoun Square on the map. ✖✖✖

GETTING WARMER

Jonathan Levine's zombie flick adds a little life to the genre.

Warm Bodies ★★½
Starring Nicholas Hoult, Teresa Palmer, Rob Corddry, Analeigh Tipton and John Malkovich. Based on the book by Isaac Marion. Written and directed by Jonathan Levine. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

ANOTHER YEAR, ANOTHER zombie apocalypse. You'd think our cinematic renaissance of the living dead, which kicked off almost 11 years ago with Danny Boyle's genre-reviving 28 Days Later, would've burnt out by now. Yet the craze continues unabated, just as resilient as the shambling, brain-eating folk who populate Warm Bodies, writer/director Jonathan Levine's unexpectedly clever spin around some well-trod terrain.

Based on a popular novel by Isaac Marion, the film begins with our hero, R (he can't remember any more than the first letter of his first name), meandering through a decimated airport alongside a teeming crowd of moaning fellow corpses. Nicholas Hoult, who'll make you feel very old when you realize he's the kid from About a Boy, carries himself with a dead-eyed shuffle and prosthetic rotting flesh. We're privy to R's thoughts through quick-witted, and at times uproarious, narration. It's hard for him to recall a time before the outbreak, but he guesses from the way he's dressed that he was probably unemployed. R and his best friend (Weymouth's own Rob Corddry) like to sit around the airport bar all day, occasionally articulating a word or two.

All this changes when R meets Julie (Teresa Palmer). She's part of humanity's last holdout, fortified behind a barricade in this unnamed city. On a routine mission to salvage medicine from local pharmacies, Julie and her boyfriend, Perry (James Franco's lookalike kid brother Dave), stumble upon R and his buddies, and PG-13 carnage ensues.

Warm Bodies is puckish, witty and made with a good deal more care than the usual supernatural teensploitation.

The funny thing is, it turns out that when you eat somebody's brains you end up experiencing all their memories. So while R is busy snacking on Perry's cerebellum he's suddenly flooded with all the poor guy's wonderful experiences with Julie, and immediately falls madly in love with her. So flushed is R with affection that he rescues Julie from his pals, secretly stashing her in an abandoned airplane where he likes to hide out and listen to old vinyl records. Because in this movie's droll universe zombies can be hipsters, too.

It's an awkward courtship, to say the least. R doesn't have a lot of game, given that he's dead. But a strange thing happens as he hangs out with Julie. R stops rotting and starts remembering things. He even manages to get two or three words out in a row. Apparently, love does conquer all, even zombiehood.

Marion's book was a riff on Romeo and Juliet (in case the main character's names didn't tip you off), but it's easy to read Levine's adaptation as a devastatingly funny send-up of the Twilight phenomenon. I was at a Barnes & Noble recently and saw an entire section devoted to "teen paranormal romance." Warm Bodies is at its funniest when the film is digging into the messy details of just how such romances might work.

Of course, there are still generic plot requirements to be serviced. Naturally, the paranoid leader of the human resistance is Julie's father, played with an admirably straight face by John Malkovich. He's one of the last guys on Earth, which makes him probably the very last guy on Earth who'd want to see his daughter hooking up with a zombie boyfriend. There's also that whole matter of eating her ex, but the course of true love never did run smooth.

Warm Bodies is puckish, witty and made with a good deal more care than the usual supernatural teensploitation. Levine helmed 2011's cancer comedy 50/50, as well as 2008's wonderfully druggy coming-of-age comedy The Wackness, which you might recall as the movie where Ben Kingsley shags an Olsen twin in a barroom phone booth. He's got a knack for punchy music cues, and he elicits winning performances from his leads. Hoult works wonders with the dry voice-over narration, and Palmer is appealing enough to sell us on some character decisions that aren't exactly plausible.

Warm Bodies won't be mistaken for art, but I liked it better than Zombieland if you're looking for something in a similar wheelhouse. And while it's not quite as funny as that last Twilight movie, Breaking Dawn wasn't strictly meant to be a comedy. ✖✖✖

WILLY'S WORLD

plays Cafe 939 on Feb. 13.

IT'S FRIDAY NIGHT ON MARTHA'S Vineyard, the time and place to tune into The Fish and Farm Report on community radio station WVVY-FM. That's where you can usually find island-native Willy Mason, cohosting the news program about natural resources. It's an odd contrast to how you'd hear Mason on the airwaves in the U.K., where he's treasured as a country-folk troubadour.

Such duality has been part of Mason's life since he was a high school senior invited onstage by Conor Oberst, who heard about the singer/songwriter from an associate and released Mason's 2004 debut, Where the Humans Eat, on his Team Love label. Mason's song "Oxygen" became a hit in England, where he was hailed as a "new Dylan" and toured with a profilc very different than his stateside obscurity.

"It was all due to this Radio 1 DJ that started spinning my record 'cause he liked it, and that wouldn't happen here," Mason says from the road in Minnesota. "You gotta put in the time, and I haven't had the chance to do that because I've been so busy overseas." His current tour is winding toward a local date at Berklee's Cafe 939 with his band, featuring violist Nina Violet and keyboardist Gardner Allen.

After coups like opening a tour for Radiohead and playing England's Glastonbury Festival, Mason largely retreated to the Vineyard in the wake of 2007's If the Ocean Gets Rough. He played in friends' bands, went shell-fishing and helped get the low-wattage WVVY on track.

"I'd sort of done my time in the music business, and most of my peers had done their time in college as a parallel experience, so we got home and said, 'We're now free to do what we want,'" says Mason, 28. "When I started touring, the idea of community was very important to me, the idea of being a member of a larger social group, as part of one's identity. And I thought of the island as my community and something I had a responsibility to as well."

Both his communal and musical roots can be traced to the influence of his parents, folksingers who'd write songs around the house and invite Mason and his drummer brother, Sam, to sit in at gigs. "It was a temperamental, strange group of people," Mason says of his family. "But it was a place where the act of creating was a comfortable thing to do. It wasn't weird to disappear somewhere or sit in a corner and intently focus on something, and that made it a lot easier to be comfortable with writing songs."

Faraway fame didn't change that dynamic. "Growing up in a smaller environment like that made it feel as if the social hierarchy wasn't so significant. When I got to play at the Hot Tin Roof, which was the big venue on the island, during high school, that was as big a deal for me at the time as it was to play with Radiohead," he says. "It's like my meters were set on the island, and I can't really go above that. The other thing is, going to England, it sort of feels like a video game or something. It doesn't feel real."

His Vineyard retreat still spawned new material to recast Mason's gift to the world at large. He recently played Australian arenas with Mumford & Sons and released his third album, Carry On, on Mumford keyboardist Ben Lovett's Communion label. The album rekindled U.K. praise but won't see a U.S. release until later this year (though three of its tunes can also be heard on Don't Stop Now, his new four-song EP). Mason worked with producer Dan Carey (M.I.A., Hot Chip), who ran a drum box through various amplifiers and delays to frame the singer's earthy musings in a broader rhythm and atmosphere.

"I wasn't thinking of production when I wrote them," Mason says. "I was listening to a lot of blues and gospel and early country music, so I was thinking in a very simple palette.... I'm just in my corner, doing my own thing, trying to write songs that make people feel good. There's plenty of experimenting I'd still like to do, but for now I've got this niche that's working alright for me." ×××

TRAIN OF THOUGHT

The drawbacks to life on the rails

Off the tracks

I LIKE TRAINS, IN THEORY. If you have to commute, it's better to read a book or do some work rather than stare at brake lights. Trains can be convivial, especially after work on Fridays when there's a bar car. And taking a train is generally cheaper, and possibly faster, than driving.

So I understand why there are always proposals kicking around for more trains, especially in New England. Whether you're talking about the mythical connector between North and South Stations or the proposed train from New York to Pittsfield, there's no shortage of ideas for rail lines. Next May, the new CapeFlyer train will begin running from Boston to Hyannis. But despite all the good intentions, I'll tell you why people ride trains. It's because the alternatives are so unpalatable that a train offers the least-awful option in a travel-themed game of, "Would You Rather?" Given the festival of misery that is Route 3 in the summer, that Cape train might actually do alright.

However, trains will never meet widespread acceptance in the U.S. And it has nothing to do with the physical size of the country or the engineering challenges of high-speed rails. The problem with trains is us.

America is too self-centered for trains. After all, we live in the world's hub of self-absorption, a land where at a moment's notice Burger King will custom-build a Whopper according to your every whim. Thus, the operating premise of rail travel—that a bunch of people are going to show up and agree to go to the same place at an appointed time—sounds mildly preposterous. I can't even manage to watch a TV show when it actually airs. Can I DVR this train ride until I'm ready?

Let me tell you a little fable that illustrates the problem. Last summer, I decided to take the Acela from South Station to New Haven. Drifting about in my fog of petty concerns, I don't buy an Acela ticket but one for the regular cattle car, with stops in Podunk, Skidstown and Loserville. That's my first error. My second error is failing to take a close look at either my ticket or the departure board. So when an Acela steams in just before my appointed departure time, I confidently drag my carry-on and computer bag down the platform and climb aboard. As the only Acela at the station, I figure it has to be my train.

Momentarily, a conductor strolls down the aisle of the curiously empty train and asks me what the hell I'm doing. When I inform him that I'm going to New Haven, he replies that I should get on the train that's actually going there, two platforms over. And I'd better run.

Oh, the cliché of it all. Many a time have I gazed with pity upon the poor slob who casts dignity aside and sprints down the train platform in hopes of securing a stained seat in a dingy metal tube. Those of us who walk to the train can at least feel we're kindling some ember of humanity deep beneath our sallow, resigned exteriors. Only the desperate run.

Well, now I'm desperate. Since the New Haven train is nearly full, I make my way far down the platform to find a car with empty seats. I stagger down the aisle, panting and sweating, returning the disdainful gazes of my fellow passengers with a look that says, "Hey, what are you gonna do?" I choose a seat, sit down and enjoy a moment of relief. Then I realize that I left my other bag back on the Acela.

Now I'm outside again, bolting for the empty train, running from car to car and opening every overhead bin because I don't remember where I was sitting. I find my luggage and set a new wheelie-bag 100-meter world record on my way back to the New Haven train. A conductor gestures to an open door and tells me, "That took you two minutes to get over there and back. I timed it." Just after I step in, the train pulls away from the platform. The exertion of my platform scavenger hunt has traumatized my lungs such that I spend the first half hour of the trip coughing uncontrollably, which is unfortunate since the only available seat is at one of those tables where you face another passenger. I'd like to explain the situation to the guy sitting across from me, but I'm preoccupied with the worry that I might actually be having a heart attack. Oh, the romance of the rails!

Cars present their own array of stress-inducers—in fact, after my train debacle I spent most of the next day sitting in I-95 traffic jams. But at least you know that when you're on your way to the parking garage, you'll never have to run. ✖✖✖

"The similarity between Top Chef and modeling is in being judged."

Soroff On KRISTEN KISH

The Top Chef contestant and model tells us about reality TV, tattoos and the allure of chicken fingers.

BORN IN KOREA AND ADOPTED AT FOUR MONTHS BY PARENTS WHO raised her in Kentwood, Mich., Kristen Kish, 28, is a competitor on Season 10 of Bravo's popular cooking competition Top Chef. She studied at Le Cordon Bleu in Chicago before moving to Boston where she worked for renowned chef Guy Martin at Sensing, the now defunct restaurant at the Fairmont Battery Wharf. She is the chef de cuisine at Stir, the Barbara Lynch venture that hosts daily demonstration dinners. A lifelong model, she lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: So is Barbara Lynch a cruel taskmaster?
Kristen Kish: [Laughs.] No, she's not, really. She might appear to be a really big badass, but in the nicest way possible. I can't say enough good things about her.

Why do you like making macarons?
When [Top Chef] asked me what my favorite thing to make was, I had to send along recipes. It was one of the recipes I already had written out, and it just seemed like the easiest thing to say. Although I do like to make them because they require complete perfection, and I'm a perfectionist. And I like to eat them.

Three things you always have in your fridge?
Nothing. Well, actually, a Brita water pitcher, Sriracha and some form of alcohol.

One thing you can't cook without?
Sherry vinegar, which I love. I use it just like salt, as a seasoning. It just adds this light tone of brightness.

Reality show you secretly watch?
I'm a sucker for Bravo. I don't watch them regularly, but if there's something on in the background, it's probably going to be something like the Real Housewives. I love it.

Favorite seduction dish?
I'm not really good at seduction, but I guess if you're going to do it, you should cook naked.

Do you have any flair for Asian cooking?
I like to eat it, but I don't cook it that often. And I'm not an authentic Korean because I really don't know anything other than how to eat the food. So no. Not really.

Person or celebrity you'd most like to cook for?
One of my favorite chefs is, for sure, Daniel Boulud, so that'd be an amazing, amazing thing. But really, I just like cooking for people who enjoy whatever I make for them. I like to make people happy.

How do you feel when you see yourself on TV?
I like to think I have a good side, and the problem with that is on my left side my hair looks better, on my right side my teeth look better. So every single time I see myself on TV I wish things matched up a little better.

How did the producers try to portray you?
I was myself, and I think it's safe to say that everyone's personalities are pretty accurately represented.

Is Padma Lakshmi the most beautiful woman alive?
Yes. Hands down. The first time I saw her I was like, "Oh, my God." It's unbelievable.

So what's the biggest difference between Top Chef and all the other cooking reality shows?
Top Chef is the most respectable, in my opinion. As a chef, that's the show I'd watch. It showcases people accurately and focuses on the food while still being entertaining. I think they throw challenges that are interesting, as opposed to the shows where people get screamed at.

Does it feel like being on a game show?
No. It feels like a big bowl of stress. I'm sweating the whole time. One of my friends said, "It's like Hunger Games," and I was like, "Yup."

How long before you get a James Beard award?
Depends on how long it takes people to recognize what I'm doing. I'd like that to happen at some point. It'd be great if it was before I turned 40.

What one food can you not go a week without?
Chicken fingers. I love them. The stier they are, the more I love them. If they came out of the back of a truck, frozen, I will love them.

What other guilty pleasures?
When I'm done working, the kind of food that I want is hot, fast and easy. I love Emilio's Pizza in the South End.

Grossest thing you ever ate?
I once made a meatloaf for my ex-boyfriend. He wouldn't touch it. I wouldn't touch it. It was repulsive.

How many permanent burn scars do you have?
Plenty. They're there. One is in the shape of a horse shoe. It's pretty cool. When I was doing some modeling there was a client who called my agent to ask if I was OK because they thought I was hurting myself.

Do you have a tattoo in the shape of a pig like every other chef?
No. I have six tattoos, and they're all very well thought out, and they all carry a lot of meaning for me in my life.

Any food-related?
There's a spoon and a butter knife.

Any similarities between modeling and cooking?
I can't think of any off the top of my head, but the similarity between Top Chef and modeling is in being judged.

Worst experience with a restaurant guest?
I really haven't had one. I get to meet wonderful people and get to know them on a different level than most chefs and their patrons because I'm cooking a foot away from them, and we talk about food and family and life.

Paula Deen or Rachael Ray?
No comment.

If I showed up at your house, what would you feed me?
Probably some form of pasta. But like I said, it's pretty slim pickings. ×××

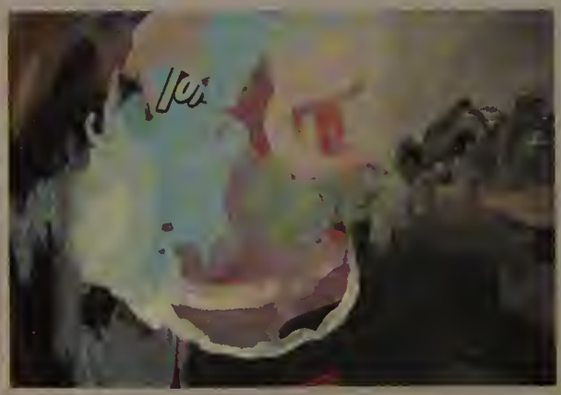
Brian Poe

The freshly minted bar at Estelle's, the latest venture from chefs Brian Poe and Eric Gburski, feels cozy, even homey.

Gburski arrives in a pressed white button-down, yellow bandana tied atop his head, and sets down a plate of crispy fried chicken thighs, so tender they practically come undone at the touch of a fork, served with fresh watermelon and radish salad. Behind the bar, a TV plays soundlessly. Employees roll silverware and make small talk while they wait for the dinner crowd to arrive. Soon, an eclectic mix from financiers to fashion students will flood the small dining room and bar area. On this corner of Mass. Ave. and Tremont, Gburski and Poe are serving up thoughtful, well-executed dishes at an affordable price point. The idea is democratic, even progressive. It's making fine food accessible to those of us who live and eat among the 99 percent.



Over the past couple of years, some of the city's most renowned chefs have turned away from white tablecloth dining in favor of casual, neighborhood joints where a superb dinner doesn't cost half a paycheck. Take Tiffani Faison at Sweet Cheeks, Chris Douglass at Tavolo and Mark Goldberg at Park, to name a few. There's good business to be made in the middle parts of the culinary scene, from the return customer at a neighborhood haunt.

When Poe—chef/owner at Beacon Hill's Tip Tap Room and chef at the Rattlesnake Bar and Grill—set his sights on expanding into the South End, his main concern was customer experience. "We wanted to do fun, pub-style food," he says, "but that grew into Southern style because it's comforting, and it takes all the work out of doing it at home." The idea, he explains, is, "what can you, the customer, have without having to work for it? We want people to come in and relax." Poe, who hails from Georgia, knows about Southern hospitality. Along with executive chef and East Coast Grill alum Gburski, he's loosely based much of the menu on what Poe's grandmother used to cook in her Alabama farmhouse.

But besides offering timeless food in a casual environment, there was another concept at work. The new restaurant's namesake, Estelle's, once belonged to a nightclub in Roxbury Crossing, just one block away from the new venue's Tremont Street spot at the end of Restaurant Row. Gburski and Poe say they liked the idea of extending the string of urbane South End eateries further down the road to blur the lines between both neighborhoods. They want residents from all zipcodes to come in, have a beer and a plate of brisket and take a load off. At the corner of sophisticated and studentville, they see Estelle's as a catalyst to bring people together by appealing to all sides: offering refined food in an environment that's not hostile if you're wearing sneakers.

In a way, contrary ideas are colliding. "It's Southern Living magazine across from a gas station in a Dickens novel," says Poe. Gburski likes the analogy, and adds that they feel like they're joining a culinary community in the neighborhood, too. "From Andy Husbands to [Gordon] Hamersley to Barbara Lynch's group," he says. "These are people we admire and respect. And if we're going to stand up on this corner and say we're gonna stretch Restaurant Row even further, then we want to bring that aspect to it, but we also want to be part of the community and get to know our neighbors." The menu is, and will continue to be, driven by conversation. If there's something their customers want to eat, you can bet they're listening.

In the 20 months since opening in Cambridge's Technology Square, chef Michael Leviton says he and his partner, co-owner Michael Krupp, found themselves adapting their restaurant, Area Four, to the demands of their clientele.

Initially, Leviton says, they were looking to open a bar/restaurant where the focus was on small plates and entrees designed for sharing. The draw, they thought, would be the approachable vibe and wood-burning ovens. Instead, in addition to the bar and upper-level dining area with vast open kitchen, they found the L-shaped space called for a cafe in the front. "There was nothing in the area at that point to service all of these people," Leviton says. "So we twisted the concept for the neighborhood. They determined what they were and were not gonna buy, literally and figuratively."

To Leviton's surprise, what was immediately and overwhelmingly popular were his New Haven–style specialty pizzas. The thin, snappy crust is more tender than traditional New York or Neapolitan–style pies, and with toppings like arugula, caramelized onions and house-made mozzarella, apparently it was just what the community wanted. "For better or for worse, it's the thing for which we've become known," he confesses.

So how did this award-winning chef go from serving fine French cuisine at his Newton flagship, Lumière, to slinging pizzas for MIT students and lab rats? "Look, I opened Lumière in 1999 when the economy was booming, and we were at the height of irrational exuberance. And I think in the dining trend, things are getting more and more casual," he says. "Frankly, when [Krupp] and I go out, most of the time we want to wear jeans, and we're probably wearing sneakers. The more that we can relax and have a great time, the more we're going to appreciate the experience." Leviton says that at Area Four, he sees repeat customers, often on the same day: in the morning when they grab coffee or breakfast in the cafe, later for lunch and sometimes even again for dinner or an after-work snack. In order for that to occur, he says they need to cultivate a laid-back feel, deliberately letting servers wear graphic-Ts and Levi's.

> "The more that we can relax and have a great time, the more we're going to appreciate the experience."

The experience might feel disparate from fine dining, but Leviton says the execution is exactly the same. "They're very similar in terms of products we use," he says. "The overall goal for [both places] is just to take good care of people, make them happy, and feed them food that we can believe in in terms of attention to detail." He says both styles are committed to simple, excellent food and service. "To my mind, they're really not that different at all, they just happen to be in different neighborhoods and have different price points. The underlying conception, aesthetic and modus operandi are basically identical."

Michael Leviton

Tim Maslow

It's an incredible value for a place calling itself a sub shop, with an ever-changing menu featuring inventive plates like "forest tartare." ("It's like you're a lumberjack in a forest. How would he cut the meat? He'd use an ax and just whack it up, so we don't cut a nice French dice," says Maslow. It's served with coarse "lumberjack" crackers: "something he'd pull out of his pack and sit down on a rock and eat.") For the record, Maslow has a new project in the works: a 68-seat New American eatery in Brookline's Washington Square rumored to be named Ribelle, but his lips are sealed. "Ribelle is a farce," says Maslow. "Maybe."

After 22 months and plenty of buzz around town, the last remaining relic from the old menu is the Caesar salad: classic romaine lettuce tossed with bagged Parmesan, bottled lemon juice and anchovy paste. "It's funny watching these cooks who come from really talented backgrounds," Maslow says. "Like our garde manger cook, he's from L'Espalier and Sel de la Terre, and he's fin' mixin' a Caesar salad in a huge bowl every few minutes." Chef de cuisine Jared Forman was at Per Se before joining Maslow at Ssäm Bar and then Strip-T's after working at Gramercy Tavern. Sous chef Dan Amighi came from Bondir. And the front-of-the-house staff is made up almost entirely of former Barbara Lynch Gruppo and Craigie on Main staffers.

> "But the misnomer here is we don't care if anyone knows that stuff. We just wanna serve food, and there's no pretenses here. And what's cool about that is, we don't have a large overhead—so we don't have to charge prices like in the city."

Maslow himself studied at the French Culinary Institute. When questioned about the disconnect between training and venue, he's displeased. "I really feel like this is the way restaurants are moving," he says. "People want to cook the food and serve the beverage that they want to eat, not overstylize food."

Maslow says the preparation and care of each dish, from aging meat to using local ingredients, is equal to that of Momofuku, "but the misnomer here is we don't care if anyone knows that stuff. We just wanna serve food, and there's no pretenses here. And what's cool about that is we don't have a large overhead, so we don't have to charge prices like in the city."

It's that middle-of-the-road price point that chef Louis DiBicarri says had been missing in Boston for quite some time. DiBicarri's cooked at L'Espalier, Sel de la Terre and is the creative force behind the Iron Chef–style pop-up Chef Louie Nights. In the '90s, he says, New Yorkers and San Franciscans could get a steak dinner for $18. "But Boston had Clio and Anna's." When he embarked on opening Tavern Road, a rustic restaurant aimed to appeal to the vanishing artist community of Fort Point, DiBicarri wanted a modern, hip, high-energy place full of local artwork. Price point is, of course, instrumental. Artists simply can't afford Fort Point anymore, DiBicarri says, so he's trying to keep the menu simple: most likely charcuterie plates, salumi, porchetta and shared entrees.

For DiBicarri, the perfect dining experience is one where the conversation is driven by the plates coming out of the kitchen. "When I see groups going out to eat, there's a lot of sharing happening," he says. "People are really into communal dining. There's this curiosity that goes on at the table." And the food chatter seems to be getting even louder, thanks to Instagram and #foodporn. It's the viral aspect of the media, DiBicarri says, that has brought once-rarities like bone marrow into the mainstream. "You're seeing it on TV, being prepared by top chefs, and so you're thinking about it differently when you see it on a menu."

According to DiBicarri, the media drives not just consumer interest in food, but competition and experimentation among kitchens as well, fostering a generation of chefs not interested in following rules. "We're seeing chefs becoming very relevant who are not necessarily wearing the white toque and apron, name-across-the-left-breast and Iron Chef jacket. You're seeing guys who are running around with shorts on and scally caps in the kitchen listening to punk rock. You see kitchens like this on Instagram, on Twitter and on Facebook, and it's almost like they're all in this secret society. They know what their friends are doing across the country and they're watching that, and they're trying to step it up a bit." DiBicarri claims that, aside from being fun to watch, it's inspiring more interesting food in neighborhoods.

"When I see groups of people going out to eat, there's alot of sharing happening. People are really into communal dining. There's this curiosity that goes on at the table."

"It's viral, it's accessible," he says. "Ten years ago, the only way I'd know what Dave Bazirgan was doing at the Fifth Floor in San Francisco is if I went there myself. Now I can see his food as he's plating it, and I can see it before it even hits the table. That's incredible." ×××

FIRST WE TAKE MANHATTAN

When Boston chefs aim for the national stage

BY NANCY GAINES ➤ PHOTOGRAPHED BY DAN WATKINS

Success, they say, breeds success. Three local chefs—Ken Oringer, Jamie Bissonnette and Michael Schlow—are about to test that maxim. They're eyeing moves outside of New England, a culinary expansion that's been attempted by few and achieved by fewer. This spring, Oringer and Bissonnette will open a New York outpost of their South End tapas restaurant, Toro. It'll abut the famed Colicchio & Sons and Del Posto in Chelsea (85 10th Ave.), making the building a mini-restaurant row. Schlow, for his part, is eyeballing Washington, D.C.

Schlow's crossed the state line before. He runs Alta Strada at Foxwoods, in Connecticut, and Pine, the dining room at the inn at Dartmouth College. Oringer took a regional gambit when he opened Earth at Hidden Pond in Kennebunkport, Maine. But, of course, resort restaurants and casino eateries aren't the same as opening to the critics in Manhattan. Perhaps that's one reason so few Boston chefs seem to aim outside the neighborhood. The mythic attractions that lure comedians to New York, musicians to Nashville and stylists to L.A.—and then dash their plans like Lorelei's rock—don't seem to hold sway for local chefs. They come to Boston on a star trajectory, or work their way up here and stay. Siren songs be damned.

Or is there history to be heeded?

Roger Berkowitz's Legal Sea Foods is Boston's biggest export success, now in nine states and D.C. Steve DiFillippo took his Back Bay Italian steakhouse, Davio's, to Philly and Atlanta. But these are rare cases of brands going imperial. More common are the experiences of restaurateurs like Charlie Sarkis, who once owned dozens of casual spots around town like Joe's, Charley's, Papa Razzi and J.C. Hillary's. He tried to export his brand to Florida, with mixed results. Jae Chung, king of Asian fusion in the 1990s, also tried to branch out but failed.

Solo chefs, too, have taken the plunge. In 1986, Lydia Shire, already a superstar in kitchens like the Bostonian Hotel, Maison Robert and Harvest, was lured to L.A. to open the Four Seasons Hotel's restaurant as the chain's first female executive chef. Homesickness, plus her dream of opening her own restaurant, brought Shire back to Boston in 1989 when she created Biba.

And then there's Todd English. In 1989, his Olives in Charlestown was booming, leading a cross-country trend for smarter, heartier, hipper, pricier pizza. "A beacon of culinary cool," wowed The New York Times. Over the next 20 years, English remained the top celebrity chef of Boston, at one point owning or consulting at 23 restaurants nationally, and even on a pair of cruise ships. In New York alone, English opened four venues between 2010 and 2012.

"Developers definitely like Tico, and D.C. would be the place."

"He's one of the most successful chefs in the country," wrote The New York Times in June 2011, while also cementing his reputation as a derided "party-hopping Casanova." Much of the bad press seemed to stem from English having his head turned from Boston by the glam of New York and Vegas. The folks at home felt pissy. English also had a pocketful of lawsuits against him, mostly emanating from the go-go years when franchise fever struck. At the time, English said, "It's like losing a big game, but you're out there playing, man. You tried." English now owns 15 places, four in Boston.

So it seemed that a big-time Boston chef who wanted to launch a venture outside the regional borders was an idea going nowhere. Many names affixed to the idea stayed close to home. Ming Tsai went to the Seaport. The Aquitaine Group kept to familiar, South End turf with Cinquecento. Jamie Mammano of the Columbus Hospitality Group (Mistral, Teatro, Sorellina, Mooo, the Inn at St. Botolph) went to Burlington, where his L'Andana is highly praised. Chris Schlesinger of the (recently sold) East Coast Grill, operates Back Eddy in Westport.

Says Barbara Lynch, owner of the many venues of the Barbara Lynch Gruppo, "Expanding in other cities was never on my agenda. I love being able to pop into any of my restaurants at any time to work with the team, meet guests, and help put out fires. Also, being from Boston, it's always been important to me to have direct ties to the city and neighborhoods where I open concepts." That said, she admires "others who can do it and do it well."

It seemed like no one wanted to follow in English's footsteps. But if anyone were to roll the dice, it'd logically be Oringer and Schlow. Oringer grew up in New Jersey and Schlow in Brooklyn, with noses pressed up against the windowpanes. "With the lights just across the river, you can imagine what that was like growing up," says Oringer, who saw New York as a spot to grow and practice; perhaps eventually return.

Oringer, 47, has the résumé of a national star. He worked at the prestigious River Café in Manhattan, then at Al Forno in Providence, R.I., moving up to Jean-Georges Vongerichten's esteemed dining room at the then–Lafayette Hotel in Boston. After a stint at the San Francisco Mandarin Oriental, he came back to Boston in 1997 to open Clio, a stunner from the start, securing his win of the James Beard Award for best chef in the Northeast. In 2002, he opened Uni in the lounge of Clio and, in 2005, launched Toro. Next was La Verdad, near Fenway Park (which will now compete with Michael Schlow's reincarnation of Happy's as a Mexican joint), and in 2009, Coppa, an enoteca he opened with Bissonnette. Finally, in 2011, he opened Earth in Kennebunkport. It was then that he began to talk about New York.

For Bissonnette, who grew up in Hartford, Conn., the move will be a step into the big time. He was the opening executive chef at Eastern Standard in 2005 before joining Oringer's team in 2007 at KO Prime, and has since been chef at Toro and chef and partner at Coppa.

Schlow, 48, owner of Radius, Via Matta, Tico, two Alta Stradas and the upcoming

"We're like the odd couple. Ken is all go-go-go and I'm more, well, I can't say I don't want to if I don't try."

Mexican restaurant, saw profit in the idea of Latin-influenced dishes and a good cocktail list. "Boston is my home, but there are other places where the concept does well," he says. "Developers definitely like Tico, and D.C. would be the place most interested." Named a best new restaurant by Esquire in 2011, Tico seems like a replicable success story.

With two small children, a wife and six restaurants all doing well, Oringer didn't need any more outlets. "People from all over, developers, had been pushing me to come to another city—but not New York," says Oringer. "But chefs from other parts of the country were doing real well there. People didn't care who you were as long as you were good."

Bissonnette, 35, says he had some hesitation when Oringer proposed the move. "I just didn't show it, unlike Ken. We're like the odd couple. Ken is all go-go-go, and I'm more, well, I can't say I don't want to if I don't try."

The two have been commuting to Manhattan for about a year, while legal details with the developer and landlord were handled. ("The red tape is no different.")

While Toro New York's design and menus are still works in progress, the pair hope for a May or June inaugural. Then it'll be time for track records to be tested, and for the critics to do their work. And if success really does breed success, then Boston's national reputation for cuisine might soon outgrow clam chowder. ✖✖✖

Fit to Pit

HEAT OF THE MOMENT

THE STEAMY BACKSEATS at drive-in theaters, where skin sticks to vinyl and the work onscreen is ignored, is where Boston-formed indie-tronica band Passion Pit found its name. Now, after an on-and-off existence stemming from lead vocalist/keyboardist Michael Angelakos' battle with bipolar disorder, Passion Pit returns, promoting a new album three years in the making. The Berklee and Emerson alums' sophomore effort, Gossamer, stays true to the band's upbeat yet tortured aesthetic, showing a penchant for dark lyrics veiled by shimmering melodies. Fall for Passion Pit Feb. 9 at Agganis Arena.

Instrumental Moment

Hold the Key Beethoven didn't audition for his part in 33 Variations, but he's still an integral member of the cast. This stage drama is based on how the composer, after initially rejecting a publisher's request to arrange a variation of a waltz, was inspired to construct 33 versions of the same theme. Two centuries later, the play follows musicologist Katherine Brandt, who works to uncover Beethoven's intention. Consumed by the project, Brandt must also face the music as she battles ALS, a struggle that parallels the composer's hearing loss. Watch these characters compose themselves at the Lyric Stage Company through Feb. 2.

Terrorism and Tiaras

What happens when you combine beauty pageants with boot camps? The World Before Her, a controversial documentary from director Nisha Pahuja, explores India as it struggles with westernization and tries to hold on to traditions. In one corner is the Durgha Vahini, who run terrorist camps where girls are taught to protect their Hindu values and prepare for battle against Islam, Christianity and all Western influences. Their efforts are contrasted with the glamorous and "immoral" lifestyle of beauty pageants, which grow more popular in the country. See the interplay of beauty and brutality at the UMass Film Series on Feb. 7.

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At Coolidge Corner Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

The Central Park Five ★★ ½ Ravaged by the crack epidemic, New York City in the late 1980s was a powder keg of racial unrest. Anyone around at the time will remember the case of a female jogger, savagely raped and beaten within an inch of her life in Central Park, and the five black and Latino teenagers convicted of the heinous crime. Fewer folks know that these boys were innocent. A serial rapist stepped forward and confessed in 2002, after the convicted had already served lengthy prison terms. PBS mainstay Ken Burns, codirecting with his daughter and his son-in-law, is an unlikely choice for such incendiary material, and the film feels weirdly muted regarding this gross miscarriage of justice. It's a polite, empathetic movie that contains a lot of valuable information but little anger. The crooked cops, overzealous prosecutors and reckless media sensationalists all get off easy, as the movie's focus is on sadness and not rage. I wish Spike Lee had directed it instead. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Gangster Squad ★ ½ Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's unintentionally hilarious new film is so slick and glossy, I almost slipped on it. Half of Hollywood's cool crowd has been laughably miscast to put on an anachronistic fashion show, caring not a whit for historical accuracy or any semblance of period detail. The 1940s jargon clangs with the contemporary performances, and every set looks like a soundstage built yesterday. The Ellroy for Dummies plot concerns legendary racketeer Mickey Cohen, played here by Sean Penn beneath hideous prosthetic makeup and grotesque physical contortions. Josh Brolin's incorruptible cop, who wears one sour facial expression the whole movie, is recruited by Nick Nolte's wheezy police chief to head up a crew of vigilantes who leave their badges at home to take out Cohen's L.A. gambling operations by any means necessary. Ryan Gosling tackles the Doc Holliday role of a morally dubious, skirt-chasing lush by amusing himself in the ludicrous film in which he's trapped. His omnipresent smirk betrays a contempt for the material rivaled only by my own. (Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Hitchcock ★ ½ Stupid and insulting, director Sasha Gervasi's cartoonish look behind the scenes at the making of Psycho casts Anthony Hopkins as the master of suspense, burying the actor beneath several tons of gooey prosthetic makeup and a ridiculous fat suit. It's like watching someone try to act with their head wrapped in silly putty. Not that it matters much, as Gervasi and screenwriter John J. McLaughlin can't be bothered to even feign interest in the actual nuts and bolts of Hitchcock's craft. They instead opt for a silly, tabloid farce that depicts the director as a creepy peeping tom living out his murderous sexual fantasies through imaginary conversations with serial killer Ed Gein (Michael Wincott.) Hitch gets it in his head that his wife Alma (Helen Mirren) is cheating on him with Danny Houston's pompous windbag, and the ensuing tiresome dysfunction comes complete with groaningly obvious inside jokes for movie buffs every five minutes or so. I'd rather be watching Gus Van Sant's Psycho remake, and when was the last time anybody said that? (At Kendall Square.)

The Impossible ★★ ½ J.A. Bayona's true tale of a vacationing family torn asunder by the 2004 tsunami is stunningly crafted and motion sickness inducing. The film has no shortage of shocks and a pummeling, visceral approach to the horrors of this natural disaster. Ewan McGregor and Naomi Watts star as a couple of happy, wealthy parents split up in the storm who wander wounded through the wreckage and relief camps with their children in tow. Bayona, who helmed a nifty little thriller called The Orphanage a few years back, stresses the sheer physicality of their ordeal. The gravely battered Watts gives a performance of stirring grit, and the sheer brutality of it all might account for why Bayona overcompensates with maudlin schmaltz and a syrupy, over-insistent score. However admirable from a storytelling perspective, the narrow focus gives short shrift to the millions of other victims, lending to the unpleasant idea that this historic calamity was just something that ruined a white family's vacation. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Jack Reacher ★★★ Working from One Shot, the ninth novel in Lee Child's inexhaustible but readable series, writer/director Christopher McQuarrie sticks a never droller Tom Cruise in the convoluted case of a Pittsburgh sniper who may or may not have been framed. As typical of Child's tales, the title character meticulously pores over the evidence with an almost Asperger-ish focus, openly insulting the local authorities while periodically mopping the floor with folks dumb enough to start bare-knuckle brawls. There's a pulpy zing to the dialogue, with some serious belly laughs arising from Reacher's blasé understatements and lightning-quick displays of superhuman strength. It could all easily seem like a silly exercise in movie star ego gratification if Cruise and McQuarrie didn't approach the material with just the right touch of humor. Jack Reacher is a deliberately lo-fi, old-school detective yarn that, at its best, feels like a really good episode of a '70s television show. That's fine with me. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but, if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Promised Land ★★ Matt Damon is such an effortlessly compelling, low-key screen presence, I'd follow him anywhere. That includes this picture, despite Promised Land being a disappointing, painfully earnest, social issues melodrama. In a tale penned by the star and fellow Boston native John Krasinski, Damon and the invaluable Frances McDormand play representatives of a multinational natural gas conglomerate who arrive in a deliberately unnamed farm town attempting to lease the land for fracking purposes. Krasinski is the backwards-baseball-cap-and-cargo-shorts–wearing environmentalist who teams up with Hal Holbrook's community leader for a lot of long-winded lectures. Director Gus Van Sant does his best to shade these proceedings with an admirable appreciation for everyday life, and it's a testament to his casual mastery that the movie ever feels like anything more than a glorified PowerPoint presentation. Our loyalties are instantly lopsided, as Damon is a born movie star while John Krasinski is a tall geeky guy from television. I spent the entire time rooting for the bad guy. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel Silver Linings Playbook into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of "edginess." It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her police officer husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

This Is 40 ★★ Clearly aspiring to be the John Cassavetes of penis jokes, writer/director Judd Apatow turns inward for This Is 40, a semi-autobiographical sprawl with some honest moments strewn about the shapeless bickering. Paul Rudd and Leslie Mann reprise their roles as the devoted but dissatisfied married couple who stole Apatow's 2007 surprise smash Knocked Up. It's probably not the savviest move at this moment in the zeitgeist to try and elicit sympathy for wealthy folks living beyond their means. (Let's just say that Apatow's idea of financial distress is a good deal comfier than my own experience.) The meandering first hour and a half of this absurdly overlong movie successfully depicts the day-to-day grind of family life, unflinchingly chronicling all the temper tantrums, petty slights and lack of privacy that come with any prolonged cohabitation. The rougher parts are salvaged only by a sublime turn from Albert Brooks. Apatow's honesty is commendable, but after 134 minutes you'll wish he'd kept some things to himself. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At Boston Common, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somervile and in the suburbs.)

Gapes of Wrath

Nobel Prize–winner John Steinbeck would be head-banging in his grave. Out of Costa Mesa, Calif., Of Mice & Men is a metalcore band that's won a voluble fan base since its 2010 self-titled debut album. The writerly rockers have been touring extensively ever since, led by 25-year-old frontman Austin Carlile. Combining the requisite screaming with clean vocals, catchy choruses and intense breakdowns, the band travels east of Eden, to Royale, for a gig on Feb. 6.

Return to Nature

Thanks to Instagram, we're all visionary photographers these days. But few of us know from where those popular filters originate. Enter Second Nature: Abstract Photography Then and Now, an exhibit that connects viewers with our photographic history. Sampling works from the 1930s to the present day, Second Nature includes images from Aaron Siskind, Jennifer West, György Kepes and others, with media ranging from video projection to silver gelatin print. The outcomes are similar to what you might find in your favorite Instagram posts, but these artists have the chops to pull it off without a smartphone. Look through history's lens at DeCordova Sculpture Park and Museum through March 3.

Mrs. Frankenstein

In the story of Frankenstein, an ambitious medical student snatches fresh bodies from the morgue for his creepy experiments. Spoiler alert: Terrible things happen when you try to reanimate a corpse. In reality, Mary Shelley's iconic tale was inspired by the work of actual scientists in the 19th century. With The Lady and Her Monsters, Emerson professor Roseanne Montillo explores how Shelley came to create her famous novel by illustrating the colorful characters surrounding her life and revealing some of the author's darkest secrets. See how it all stitches together at Brookline Booksmith on Feb. 5.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

---

Face-Off

You couldn't wave a hockey stick without hitting somebody famous when the W Hotel hosted a party to announce the green-light on Turk, a movie about the tumultuous life of Bruins great Derek Sanderson.

Sanderson's BFF Bobby Orr was there to celebrate with him, along with the likes of teammate Johnny Bucyk, filmmaker Ed Burns, former mayor and ambassador to the Vatican Ray Flynn, Wicked Tuna star Ralph Wilkins, best-selling author Casey Sherman, sports anchor Bob Lobel, and news anchor Kim Carrigan, who mixed and mingled with the likes of the party's genial hosts, Maggie and Kevin Ahearn, iconoclastic salon owner Sandy Poirier, R&B crooner Louie Belo, dapper developer Don Chiofaro, Bruins wife Rebecca Seidenberg and the stunning Aiste Feinberg, man-about-town Ed Amaral, babe-a-licious blonde Elaine Dolley, WHDH-TV Channel 7 hottie Ryan Schulteis, and a whole mess of others.

Not surprisingly, there was plenty of talk about the end of the lockout, including which players needed to shed a few pounds now that the season has finally started.

Then there was the man who said, "You look great!" to a female friend, who replied, "It's the miracle of an occasional trip to Wellesley and a needle."

However, the evening's funniest remark came from Wilkins, who was asked which he thought was more dangerous: playing hockey or tuna fishing.

In Vino Veritas

We may not make great wines in Boston, but we certainly know how to drink 'em—the essential point of the Boston Wine Festival, which continues through March at the Boston Harbor Hotel.

The three-month bacchanalia (and America's oldest wine festival) got off to a rousing start with a Champagne reception hosted by the festival's founder, chef Daniel Bruce, at Meritage, followed by an Opening Night gala in the Wharf Room, overlooking the harbor.

Ambassador Ray Flynn and Bobby Orr at the Turk party

Derek Sanderson at the Turk party

Jared Bowen at the opening of the Boston Wine Festival

Present and accounted for were such oenophiles as WGBH-TV Channel 2's answer to Jimmy Stewart, Jared Bowen, the dashing Tom Eberhardt, GQ model Robert Weintraub and real-estate hottie Elena Krupennikova, tourism grand poobah Pat Moscaritolo, party pair Paula Jaq'Lyn and George Brown, nuclear reactor Janet Wu (who looked even more petite standing next to a jeroboam of Champagne), pageant queen AJ Williams and smoking hot firefighter Johnny Small, real-estate tycoon Ken Tutunjian, intoxicating writer Liza Weisstuch, purveyor of good eats Harry Silverstein, deeply private publicist Steve Pellegrino, and one woman who said to a friend, "When are you coming to our house in Burgundy? It only took two years, but the walls are finally painted."

However, the evening's punniest comment came from the couple who quibbled over something meaningless until one of them finally said, "Oh, put a cork in it."

The Kids Are Alright

Anyone who thinks high school students are lazy or apathetic should've been in the Great Hall of the State House when the Red Cross hosted a dance for its 1,200-strong youth corps.

The evening attracted about 400 youngsters, all looking Gossip Girl glamorous and getting their freak on to a DJ who blessedly didn't pander to the lowest common denominator and could easily get a gig at the Delano.

Guests came from the Red Cross clubs at schools ranging from Boston Latin to Hopkinton High, and included such bright young things as co-chairs Thomas Vu and Amanda Lee, British School of Boston cutie Theresa Annasen, Veronika (prettier than Jessica but no relation) Biehl, the stunning Olivia Ward, pixieish blonde Sara Maiella, champion figure skater and 2010 junior silver medalist Yasmin Siraj, Cantonian Selwyn Rogers, fashionista Taylor James, Red Cross CEO Jarret Barrios, South Boston State Rep. Nick Collins, and equally civic-minded others.

On the downside, the bar had nothing more potent than soda, but then again, it was one of the few parties I'll go to this year that didn't result in a debilitating hangover. ×××

PAINTING IN INDIA AFTER INDEPENDENCE

FROM THE PEABODY ESSEX MUSEUM'S HERWITZ COLLECTION

Through April 21, 2013

India's independence from British rule at midnight on August 15, 1947, fueled a revolutionary art movement that continued through the economic boom of the 1990s. Three generations of Indian artists embraced their individualistic approaches to modern art even as they engaged with and responded to the world around them.

Love's Labors

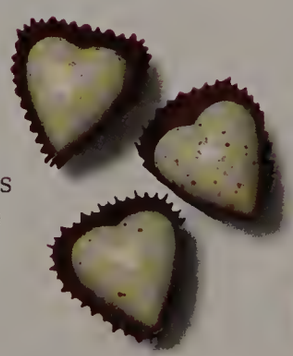
A couple of weeks ago, my fiancée and I visited Mohegan Sun, a casino with the ambience of the Death Star if it had been designed by woodchucks. We were there for the Sun WineFest, an annual trade show/roaring bacchanal that included more than 1,000 brands, at least one chocolate fountain and crowds denser than a Paula Deen queso dip. But as we left the Elite Cru tasting, the perfume of Napa cabernet fresh on our lips, we stopped at a slot machine.

Adam DeTour



I recall the words, "This will pay for the wedding," being uttered, and not entirely in jest. So, leaving my fiancée tapping dutifully at the plastic buttons, I went hunting for an ATM.

Unless you're a minotaur, never attempt to navigate an Indian casino, at least not without a native guide. Adrift in the acid glare, I prowled the aisles, looking for the spot where I'd left her. For an hour and a half, I wandered through burbling landscapes, past Dale Chihuly sculptures, through the disgorged populations of a hundred assisted living facilities. At one point, I discovered a place in which everyone, even the bartenders, spoke Cantonese. When I finally found her, I felt like Ulysses on the shores of Ithaca, if Ithaca were inhabited by high-wattage Wheel of Fortune machines instead of sheep.

The moral is, the course of true love never runs smooth. To win the hand of your beloved, you must harrow the wilderness, or at least the luxurious adult gaming destination. Hence our annual singles issue, in which we celebrate those devoted to the quest.

YALONDA HOWZE HAS CANDY in her blood. As a kid, she helped her mother run sweet shops in Detroit, Mich. Now, several decades and a law degree later, she's opened Evelyn and Angel's, a confectionery in Porter Square designed to appeal to all the senses. The aroma of roasting nuts wafts down the block while, inside, the clean, bright space glows with an array of sugary delights. Howze stocks treats from around the country, including dressy chocolates with pink peppercorns and lavender, and an entire wall of salt water taffy. There's even a proper soda fountain in the works. Heavenly.

The Arabic flavors in Oleana's nougat glacé are unchanging (pistachio, honey, saffron, orange blossom water), but executive pastry chef Maura Kilpatrick regularly switches up the accompaniments. These days, it's all about citrus. Kilpatrick confits slivers of Meyer lemons and squeezes their juice into a glossy curd. Along with the sweetness of a prickly pear sorbet, they provide tart, tangy notes of contrast for this inspired ice cream. ELIZABETH BOMZE

CLASS ACT

TO THE TRULY SELFLESS SHUTTLE RIDERS: You have no idea how grateful I am to the three of you who disembarked from the (smaller than usual) Charlestown Navy Yard to North Station shuttle so that I could make my train. I had been letting everyone else on first (including you) so I could be last to get on and you commented how you always see me running for the train once we hit the Causeway Street stop. When it was clear I wasn't going to be able to get on, you came off the shuttle to let me on, even though it was five degrees outside and you had to wait for the next shuttle. What an incredibly generous act. I haven't stopped thinking about it and you guys. Hope to see you again so I can thank you in person, but until then: THANK YOU, THANK YOU, THANK YOU! The shuttle sprinter

To the MBTA: As a commuter I understand that things happen. Signal problems, disabled trains, broken buses. I add extra time to my commute for those reasons. What I don't comprehend are bus drivers who'd rather speed on by because they're too late/too early to stop. I understand that when there are 20 people waiting but only room for five, it can be a difficult situation. However when the wind chill is below zero, you should stop and pick up those five people! This is a civilized country—we won't climb on the roof, smash the windows and slash the tires if we're not admitted entry. Watching buses go by with open seats and space in the back is intolerable. All you need to do is ask the other riders to move back and tell the people waiting you'll take five people. Ditch

To the tourists on Charles Street: I've been to Europe, so I know you guys know how to walk. You're all very good at it actually, and extremely efficient. Let's bring that to Boston. You just can't have the whole sidewalk, especially when I'm late to work. Late, angry pedestrian

To whoever decided to flood Boston with road salt: Not only have the paws of many Boston dogs been burnt, but you're ruining my shoes. Somehow the sidewalks are still barely walkable even with the salt, so I beg of you, please lay off the sodium and let New England do what it does best, melt the snow with its absurd weather fluctuations. Swimming in salt

BUSTIN' CHOPS

Brian Piccini isn't looking to forge a new path with Boston Chops, opening post–Valentine's Day in the old Banq/Ginger Park space in the South End. With co-owner/executive chef Chris Coombs in the kitchen, however, the team is tweaking the concept of a traditional steakhouse. "We want to stay true to what a steakhouse should be," says Piccini, who also owns dbar and Deuxave, "yet give it a modern interpretation that's funky and urban enough to fit in the South End."

That translates to a wall-length, 30-seat bar, space for just as many at the raised leather banquettes, and room for another 120 in the loft-like dining room. Complementing and opposing the bar are an antique mirrored wall and a 2,000-bottle glass-enclosed wine room, which will be tended by cocktail historian, sommelier and L'Espalier alum Kate Moore, who'll also head the largely seasonal, somewhat classic drink list. The high ceilings have been soundproofed, and end-grain reclaimed wood floors help absorb any excess noise—a regular complaint about the old space.

Despite the building's grandeur, Piccini and Coombs intend Boston Chops to be more economical than other steakhouses. They'll still serve composed dishes with high-quality meat, but with unexpected parts of the cow to create interesting à la carte offerings. "We're going to be using tongue, cheek, brisket, skirt, hanger, flank, tripe, oxtail," says Coombs. "They're a lot more work, and it takes craft to handle those parts of the animal that are a little more difficult to prepare beautifully."

But both Coombs and Piccini agree on bone-in as their signature composition (just look at the restaurant name). With only two cuts per cow, the 10-ounce bone-in beef tenderloin comes with a goat cheese, potato and horseradish croquette, mushrooms, asparagus and hollandaise sauce. "That's $39," says Coombs. "You won't be able to get that anywhere else in the city."

With his chef de cuisine, Ryan Marcoux (L'Espalier, Sel de la Terre), Coombs also offers an interpretation of a loaded potato, which he expects to be so popular that he's hired someone just to work the potato line. The spud is piped with its own mashed filling, injected with poutine-style gravy then topped with pork belly, sour cream, chives, scallions and crisped potato skin. Sounds like the traditional steakhouse may be dead meat.

TEENSPIRIT

Sara Faith Alterman, Boston chapter co-producer of the live-journal performance Mortified, invites you to relive your oh-em-gee embarrassing teenage lovesick puppy years at the Oberon on Feb. 14.

H
I was not one of the founding members, but a little over 10 years ago, the creator, David Nadelberg, found a letter that he had written to a girl that he had a crush on but never sent. He started reading it to his friends, who all thought it was hilarious. He discovered that a lot of other people had saved embarrassing artifacts from their teen years. The stage show was born out of that. The Boston show began about six years ago.

Wh th
We call Mortified a comic excavation of the strange and extraordinary things we created as kids. So people get up on stage in front of an audience of strangers, and they read their most embarrassing diary entries, poems, school assignments—things that we knit together to tell a story about who this person was as a teenager. The point is to laugh at themselves and hope that the audience laughs along with them.

Do a lot p
We ask anyone who's interested in auditioning for the show to send us samples of their diaries so we can take a look beforehand. We don't want you to tell [us] about your teenage self using your own adult words and adult confidence. We want to see what teenage-you thought about the terrible experience that you had.

Did yo
I did keep a diary, and I wrote songs and poems. I had really nosy parents. I had a boyfriend in high school, and I made the mistake of writing this explicit note about him, and my mom found it. It was one of the most humiliating moments of my life. When you're a teenager, you're trying to snuff out what sex is anyway, and then to think that you have the privacy to do that with your friends, and then to have your mom discover that not only are you sexually active but that you don't really know what you're doing—it was just terrible. I really wish I still had that note. That was a bad one.

Drink of the Moment

HERB YOUR ENTHUSIASM

NAME: Nebbia di Garda

PRICE: $11

TRANSLATION: Fog of Garda, the biggest lake in Italy

INVENTOR: Acting general manager Matthew Schrage

INGREDIENTS: Amaro Meletti, Amaro Santa Maria al Monte, fresh lemon, mint and nutmeg (and lots of ice)

CONCEPT: A blend of sweet and herbal amari, served highball fashion. Think of it as an Italian version of a Pimms Cup.

METEOROLOGICAL IMPACT: The Meletti is from coastal Italy, while the Santa Maria al Monte is from Liguria. A mountain cold front meets sea-level warmth. Hence the foggy moniker.

FLAVOR: The mint garnish defines the nose and is accentuated by the Santa Maria's mint notes. An initial sip of sugars takes on acid in the middle, and the Meletti's saffron and spice round it out. "That reminds me of the spice trade," says Schrage. "The nutmeg is a tribute to that." The whole is lightly sweet, with a surprisingly harmonious interplay of bitter and acid. Ideal for sipping on a winter afternoon and imagining the sunlight on Lake Como.

BAR THEME: "Almost every cocktail [on the menu] has some sort of bitter," says Schrage, who resides over a library of 20+ amari and "a number" of French bitters. "The Blue Room has a long history of Mediterranean cuisine, so we thought a niche for the bar would be bitters from that part of the world."

FOOTNOTES: All cocktails are attributed, so, for example, the Maharaja's Revenge (Old Monk, Rothman, winter apricot and lime) is credited to Brother Cleve, Boston, circa 2008. "History is a context in which I like to look at a lot of things," says the articulate Schrage. "Besides, it leads to a better story."

WEIRD POP CULTURAL MANIFESTATION: Mondays in February see the bar's "Whiskey & Amari" series, inspired by spaghetti Westerns. "We were trying to create a uniquely absurdist American expression," says Schrage. So visiting bartenders will invent cocktails, mixing Western whiskey with Italian amaro, while movies play in the background. Feb. 18 is The Good, the Bad & the Ugly with Noon Inthasuwan (Moksa) and Sam Treadway (Backbar), while Feb. 25 sees Evan Harrison (Brick & Mortar) and Ted Kilpatrick (No. 9 Park) interpret Once Upon a Time in the West. "It's a fever dream of a situation," observes Schrage, correctly.

Mr. Freeze

At a party, Dhairya Dand can use what's in his cup to break the ice.

After an overnight hospitalization due to alcohol poisoning, the MIT Media Lab researcher avoided academic punishment by creating ice cubes that change colors depending on your level of inebriation. It even texts your friends via smartphone when things start spinning. "I wanted something that would be fun to have, not a clunky out-of-place device that would imply you have a drinking problem," says Dand.

The cubes, called Cheers, contain an L.E.D. light that switches between traffic light hues, with the number of sips determined by an accelerometer tucked inside. They also pulsate to music. Using an app that helps drinkers choose their emergency contacts and create personalized messages, the edible gelatin cube can wirelessly send S.O.S signals to friends when the consumption begins to take a bacchanal turn.

Although he's had interest from investors, designers and liquor companies, Dand is the main consumer of his own homegrown project. "I take the ice cubes out for the strobing, but I haven't given them a chance to make that call to my friend yet," says Dand. Cheers to that.

SINGLE FILES

Local dating sites that strike more than the usual match

SARAH HAGMAN

Object of Interest

howaboutwe.com

First impressions can make or break a date, and How About We uses that to match you. Founded by grads from Harvard and Lesley, the site lets you browse local singles' first-date proposals to find someone who shares—or piques—your interests (skydiving, anyone?). If you like someone's idea, you can learn more from his or her profile. But to find out if, say, reupholstering chairs with John Doe lives up to its virtual appeal, you'll just have to date and see.

Daily Catch

coffeemeetsbagel.com

Coffee Meets Bagel, which was founded by three sisters, one of whom went to Harvard Business School, serves up a potential match—or bagel—to your inbox every day at noon. The bagels are chosen from friends of friends on social networking sites, making background checks that much easier. You have 24 hours to review the profile and either accept or pass. If the feeling is mutual, you're connected through text messages without giving away your phone number. CMB sweetens the deal with neighborhood discounts for the first meetup.

Three Plus Company

joingrouper.com

Third wheels have never been so welcomed. With an MIT grad cofounder, Grouper was launched in Boston last fall and pairs up singles according to age, educational background and interests (determined by your tagged Facebook photos, likes and more). Each duo brings along two unattached friends to form a blind group-date. Whom you're meeting remains a mystery until you show up for prearranged reservations at venues like Gem, where $20 buys the first round of drinks. At the very worst, you'll end up with a story about that night you spent with a few strangers—sans regrets.

Beauty

BANG UP JOB

When Michelle Obama debuted her new fringe inauguration weekend, she secured a hotly debated spot in trendsetting history, right next to Jackie Kennedy. Bold enough to see if you'd make the cut? Bangs can be sexy on anyone, or so says Stacey Moreland, lead stylist at Corbu Salon. Here are her tips for picking the right trim for your face shape. Just don't let a new 'do go to your head—one fringe-inspired Twitter account is enough (yes, you, @MichellesBangs).

SQUARE

Lightly fringed or layered bangs give a soft, playful vibe and make for easy styling. A curved, asymmetrical cut softens angular lines and features.

OVAL

Add a sense of mystery with a bob and blunt, straight-cut bangs that fall to cover the eyes slightly. For medium to long hair, try a cut above the brow to create contrast.

HEART

Channel your inner Scarlett Johansson with short, side-swept bangs. Just long enough to tuck behind the ear, this cut pulls focus up from the chin to mid-face.

Political Fashion

Business Casual

In a world of pundits, partisans and power plays, fashion designer Alfred Fiandaca helps women in politics also become candidates for the best-dressed list. Raised on Newbury Street by a family of tailors and designers, Fiandaca transformed the family biz into a must-have for first females who are looking to stay politically, and fashionably, correct. Here are some of his more seamless styles on the campaign trail.

Ann Romney For the almost–First Lady, Fiandaca needed to create multiple looks that would be appropriate in every scenario. "There was a jersey dress that Mitt liked, so we made four of them in different fabrics and colors." Ann's favorite look was the shirtwaist dress, a classic style for the lady in red. "She has a fabulous figure, so she can wear almost anything."

Joan Kennedy A favorite of Fiandaca's, the first wife of late Senator Ted Kennedy broke the glass ceiling of political fashion by accentuating patterns, designs and figure-flattering shapes. In one of her more notable looks by the designer, Kennedy wore a plaid, checkered vest, along with a checkered skirt and coordinating tweed jacket. "I thought it was very fashion forward." Plus, it kept the checks and balances in working condition.

Nancy Reagan When crafting a look for the former First Lady's Just Say No campaign debut in 1986, Fiandaca chose a three-piece suit, punctuated by a silk blouse and red tweed jacket. "It was suitable and it fit in while she was talking about the program," says Fiandaca. Luckily, Reagan just said yes.

FRAT HOUSE

A writer's musings on sibling bonds

SOME BROTHERS OCCUPY THE same home but live in different psychological spaces. Others are more like conjoined twins. In this memoir, George Colt, one of four boys, explores his fraternal landscape, including love and rivalry, varieties of parental connection and evolving relationships.

Brotherhood's like a long marriage with unfolding comforts and ironies. Colt interweaves this theme with rich stories involving famous brothers: William and Henry James, the Bulgers, the standard-passing Kennedys. Colt gracefully unwinds these biographical and psychological threads. In one, John Kellogg, a vastly successful health-spa fanatic demeaned his younger brother, Will, who trumped him after many joint ventures by developing Kellogg's Corn Flakes. In other stories, siblings show tender protectiveness, like Theo van Gogh to the troubled Vincent, with Theo acting as agent and therapist. For the almost symbiotically-simpatico John and Henry Thoreau, it took John's death for Henry, seemingly the lesser one, to come fully into his own.

Brothers
By George Howe Colt

Colt grew up in Boston and Cape Cod.

While working together in quirky vaudevillian togetherness, parental favoritism and competition growled underneath the Marx Brothers' various relationships, personal and professional. Hence Groucho's trademark grouchiness. Likewise, skeins of complex, nuanced competitiveness colored actors Edwin and John Wilkes Booth's lives and careers. After John shot Lincoln, Edwin's fame took a darker turn. ×××

The loss of a sibling changes the fraternal hierarchy. After Joe Kennedy's death, Jack became the eldest brother, inheriting all the hopes and ambitions their father had invested in Joe. "It was like being drafted," Jack told a reporter. "My father wanted his eldest son in politics. 'Wanted' isn't the right word. He demanded it." Jack was now living for two, as his old Choate headmaster pointed out in a letter to Jack's parents. "I'm sure he never forgets he must live Joe's life as well as his own."

POOL YOUR RESOURCES Bahamas resorts Atlantis and the Cove.

SOME PEOPLE DON'T LIKE resorts—the canned atmosphere, being insulated from local culture—while others find them the ideal place to unwind. Anyone who falls into the latter category can do a lot worse than the Cove. It's the high-end, more sophisticated sister property to Atlantis, the behemoth pleasure palace in the Bahamas. Atlantis is probably familiar from the countless ads and billboards depicting its epic water-park and blatantly faux ruins of the fabled lost city. Parents like to take their children there because it's the sort of self-enclosed playpen where they can kiss the kids good-bye in the morning and spend the day drinking rum punch and reading People magazine by the pool. The Cove, on the other hand, is designed for those hoping to escape the crying-toddler-with-a-waterlogged-diaper scene.

From Boston, there are daily connecting flights through JFK, and a few short hours later, you'll be greeted outside Lynden Pindling Airport by a throng of genial drivers, who'll whisk your luggage out of your hands and ask if the temperature inside the taxi is OK.

A note about booking flights: Midday is the worst time to arrive in Nassau, the capital of the Bahamas, an archipelago comprising more than 700 islands. From around 11 am to 2 pm, the airport is bedlam, while simultaneously all the cruise ships disgorge hordes of polyester pantsuited passengers to clog up the streets of downtown. But the glacial pace of the crawl across the island does offer a chance to see some sites—the stately colonial House of Assembly, the imposing Fort Charlotte, and Nassau's raison d'être: tax-free retail opportunities that range from local handicrafts to YSL, Dior and Chopard.

Crossing the newly christened Sidney Poitier Bridge onto Paradise Island, Atlantis looms, looking exactly as it does in the brochures, except that there's more to it than Disney-esque architecture and waterslides.

Attached by walkways but off on its own stands the Cove: a tower that sits astride two stunning beaches. Its labyrinthine, open-air lobby is paved with travertine and lined with elaborate fountains, lush foliage, a bar

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Shopping is a blood sport in Nassau, but you needn't go all the way in town for a dose of retail therapy. The Royal Towers Shops at Atlantis have everything from Ferragamo to Versace.

The Aquaventure water park is one of the world's largest and most elaborate, and well worth putting up with all the overstimulated children.

Dolphin Cay offers guests an interactive experience with rescued dolphins, and a portion of the entry fee benefits the Kerzner Marine Foundation to promote the health of the world's oceans.

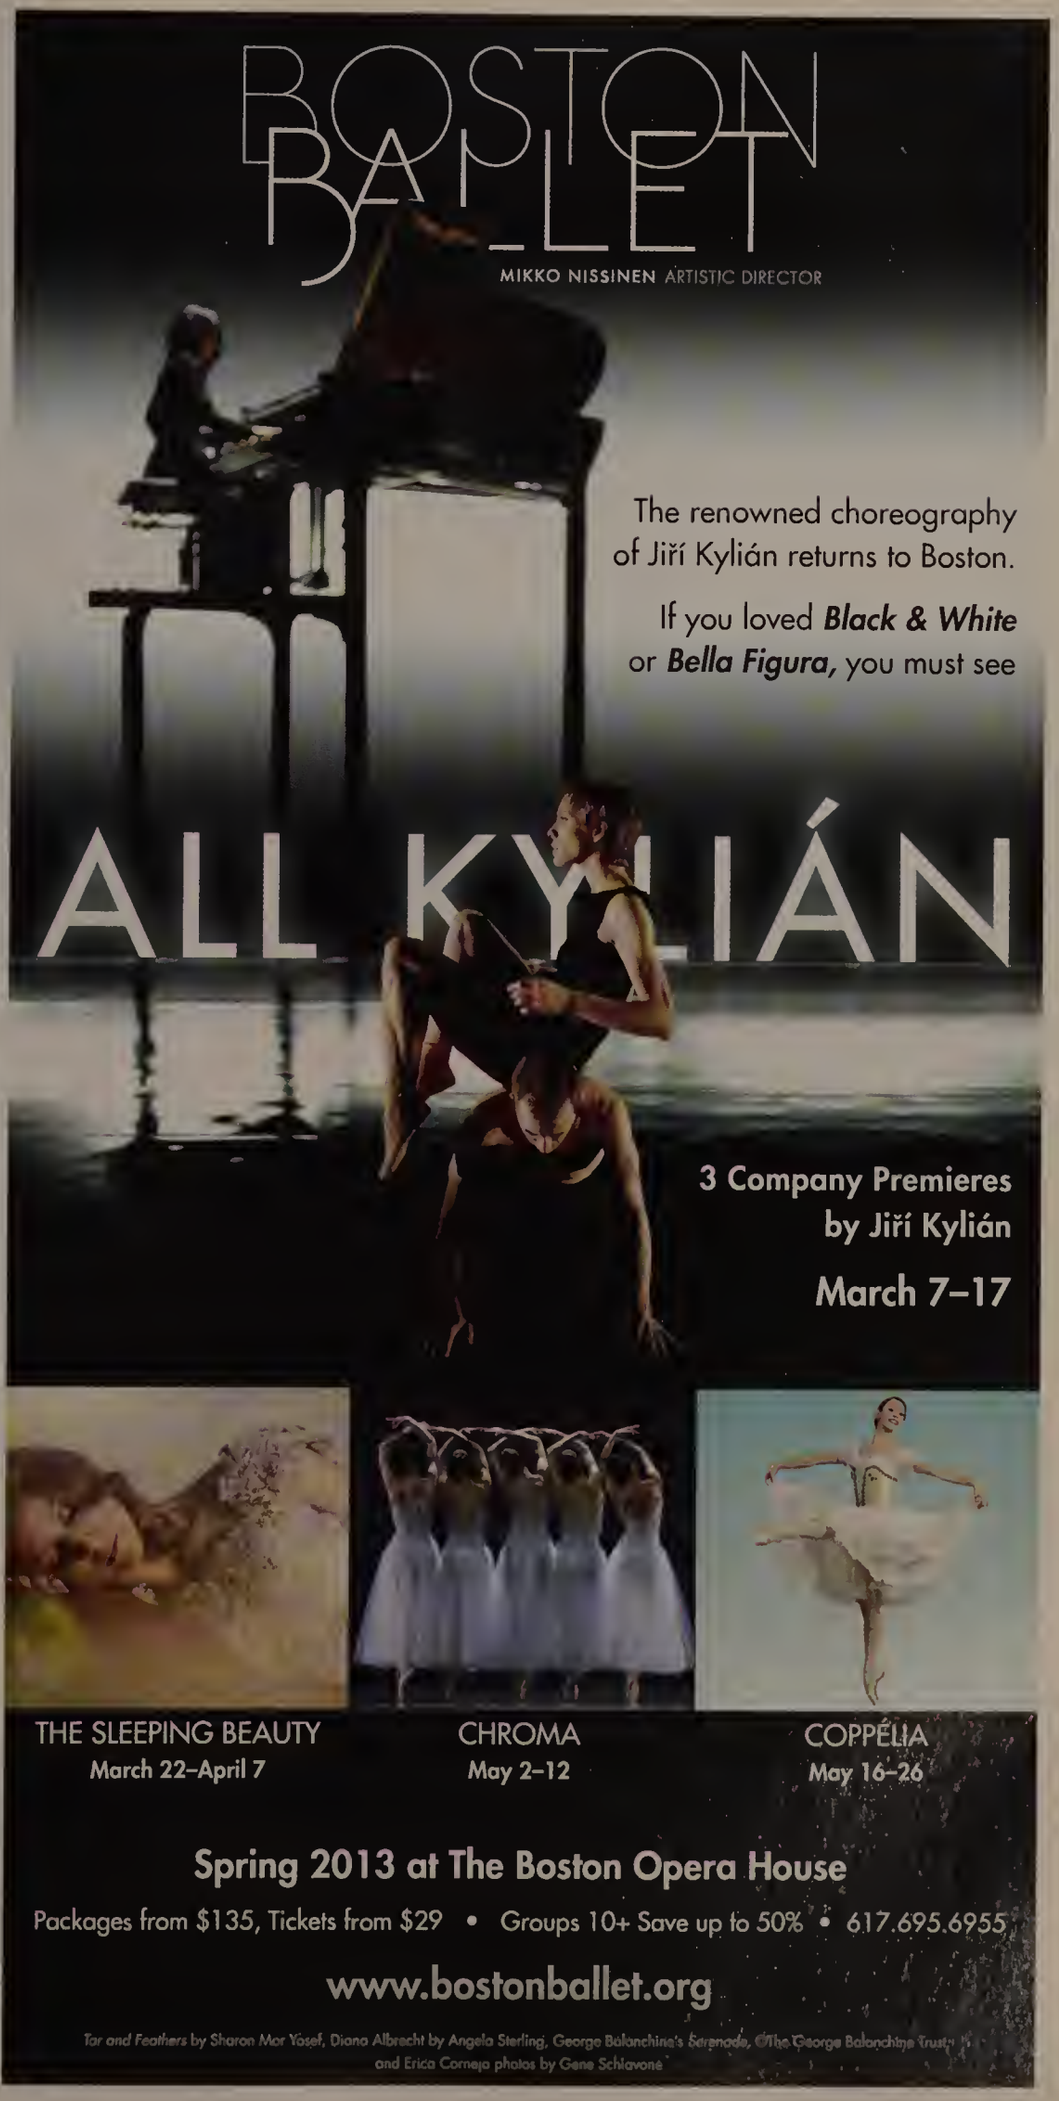
complete with gaming tables, and a Caribbean outpost of Bobby Flay's Mesa Grill. Even from rooms on the upper floors (which, on one side, overlook both the Aquaventure water park and the gargantuan edifice of Atlantis), opening the door to the balcony will greet you with the "thunk-thunk-thunk" of dance beats drifting up from the swimming pool.



One mild annoyance about the place is that, because it's restricted to guests, wristbands or room keys are checked whenever you walk outside, but the relative serenity of Paradise Beach and the blessedly kid-free Cain are worth the trouble. The latter is the Cove's adults-only beach club, featuring a swimming pool, bar, restaurant and outdoor casino, and the source of the thumping bass. Imagine the cabana milieu of every hotel in Los Angeles and the party atmosphere of South Beach transported to the Caribbean. Women in designer bikinis lounge on sun beds, while their Breitling-wearing husbands play blackjack or roulette.

Partying is what the Cove is all about, with access to the larger casino and nightlife options at Atlantis, but there are sybaritic pleasures to appeal to other senses as well. A pair of headphones and a chaise lounge are all you need to enjoy your own slice of nirvana on the beach. Meanwhile, the Mandara Spa offers such delights as a 50-minute, four-handed massage and facilities to rival any five-star spa on the planet. Then there's the food. In addition to Flay, Nobu Matsuhisa has opened one of his eponymous sushi joints, and among the several Jean-Georges Vongerichten eateries is an uncanny replica of the old Café Martinique, which James Bond fans will remember from 1965's Thunderball, and which serves the best bananas foster outside of New Orleans.

Speaking of Bond, Daniel Craig filmed scenes at the One & Only Ocean Club, a nearby resort that's part of the same hotel group. More sedate and quieter than the Cove, it's the former waterfront retreat of legendary playboy and A&P supermarket heir Huntington Hartford, and it offers a level of tranquility and elegance that would please everyone from honeymooners and reclusive rock stars to persnickety misanthropes looking to escape from the rest of humanity.

All in all, the Cove is a welcome, warm-weather weekend getaway, and for anyone bored of Miami, Las Vegas, or L.A., adding another stamp to your passport gives it that extra little frisson of fabulousness. ✖✖✖

COUNTRY FLAIR Puritan & Co.'s rustic aesthetic belies the menu's dramatic presentation, as with the lamb chop and sausage.

IN DIVERSE INMAN SQUARE, known for its tasty, value-conscious cuisine, Will Gilson's Puritan & Co. is a nod to a WASPier heritage. Gone are the saturated colors, elevated booths and draped light fixtures of its short-lived Turkish predecessor, Bosphorus. In their place are the reclaimed woods, vintage wallpaper and mason-jar chandeliers from a Country Living magazine cover. There might be communal tables and kitchen towels for napkins, but Puritan & Co. is first and foremost a fine-dining restaurant with high aspirations for technique, ingredients and service. At times, aspiration and execution match. But in the crowded category of New American fine dining, there are more consistent options (Craigie on Main, West Bridge and Bondir in the immediate area alone).

The best dish in the house isn't on the menu, and it's complimentary: the amazing Parker House rolls. The soft, buttery breads promised warm, hearty sustenance and flavor over fuss. This sentiment often collided with most of the heavily wrought dishes. While every plate was an Instagrammable visual delight, the baked scallops ($15) managed to taste even better than they looked. Framed in a shell, sliced scallops were suspended in their juice atop a parsnip puree and covered with an herb gelée that seamlessly melded the flavors of sea and earth, with mustard seeds mimicking roe to provide a sharp pop with every bite. Swordfish pastrami ($13) also proved Gilson's skill with seafood, masterfully playing with the classic Reuben by using fish, pumpernickel puree and mustard gelato.

Mounted on a wooden carving stand, the dry-cured ham ($17) was sliced too thick, tasting more like jerky than tender jamón. The bone marrow gratin ($11) was Flintstonian in portion but inedible for its fat-on-fat content. Absent any acid for contrast, the fried onions and accompanying duck-fat brioche pushed the marrow to gout-inducing territory. Better to order anything involving lamb, like the lamb belly ($14) and lamb chop and sausage ($27). A Moxie-soda reduction gave an assertive, pleasant sweetness to the roast belly. The chop and sausage resembled a deep-fried jelly donut, with its parsley and breadcrumb sausage encasing a single chop. Both elements were perfectly cooked—no easy feat when the interior is ordered medium-rare.

B.N.'s Picks

Parker House rolls

Baked scallops

Lamb chop and sausage

There's a tendency toward spuma, foam, gelées and artfully smeared sauces at Puritan. When these components imparted nuance, as with the baked scallops and pastrami, they were inspired. But often they called attention to a gap between presentation and flavor. Wood-roasted Muscovy duck ($28) was a lovely length of mahogany breast adorned with quinoa, salsify and tiny mushrooms, but it could've used more seasoning. The crispy pommes Anna that accompanied the Wagyu steak ($30) were more memorable than the meat itself. An extremely bitter chocolate cake special ($8) looked beautiful but went unfinished, as did an indifferent rum cake ($8). Both desserts came with a lot of dramatic streaks and orthogonally placed components that emphasized arrangement over substance.

Service was smooth and friendly, with staff knowledgeable about the menu and quick to answer questions. Puritan's 80-seat space includes a lively oyster bar that serves as an extension of the kitchen, so sit there if you don't mind watching the garde-manger go between shucking oysters and assembling desserts.

Puritan is anachronistic in many ways—fine dining when the trend is toward approachable; New England–inspired when regional and ethnic boundaries are losing their culinary meaning. On the other hand, in terms of hyper-stylized New American fine dining, Puritan isn't exactly unique, either. Gilson is remarkably talented and ambitious, but Puritan hasn't quite arrived yet. ✖✖✖

HYDRASONIC SKIN THERAPY

Q: WHAT'S THE BEST TREATMENT FOR DRY WINTER SKIN?

A: My absolute favorite winter treatment is hydrasonic skin therapy. This is a high-tech treatment that gently exfoliates, hydrates and nourishes your skin using sophisticated ultrasound technology.

The ultrasonic sound wave action causes pores to open up and allows the cells to drink-in water and the peptide and antioxidant serums that are layered on during the treatment. The serums nourish your skin with vitamin C and green tea, making it more resilient to the perils of winter.

This pampering treatment is very relaxing, but, even better, your skin becomes deeply hydrated and feels totally plumped-up, soft and healthy.

SHORTSIGHTED

This year's crop of Oscar-nominated live action shorts are easy on the eyes.

The 2013 Live Action Oscar Nominated Short Films ★★★
Directed by Bryan Buckley, Sam French, Shawn Christensen, Tom Van Avermaet and Yan England. Now playing at Kendall Square and available via Video on Demand on Feb. 19.

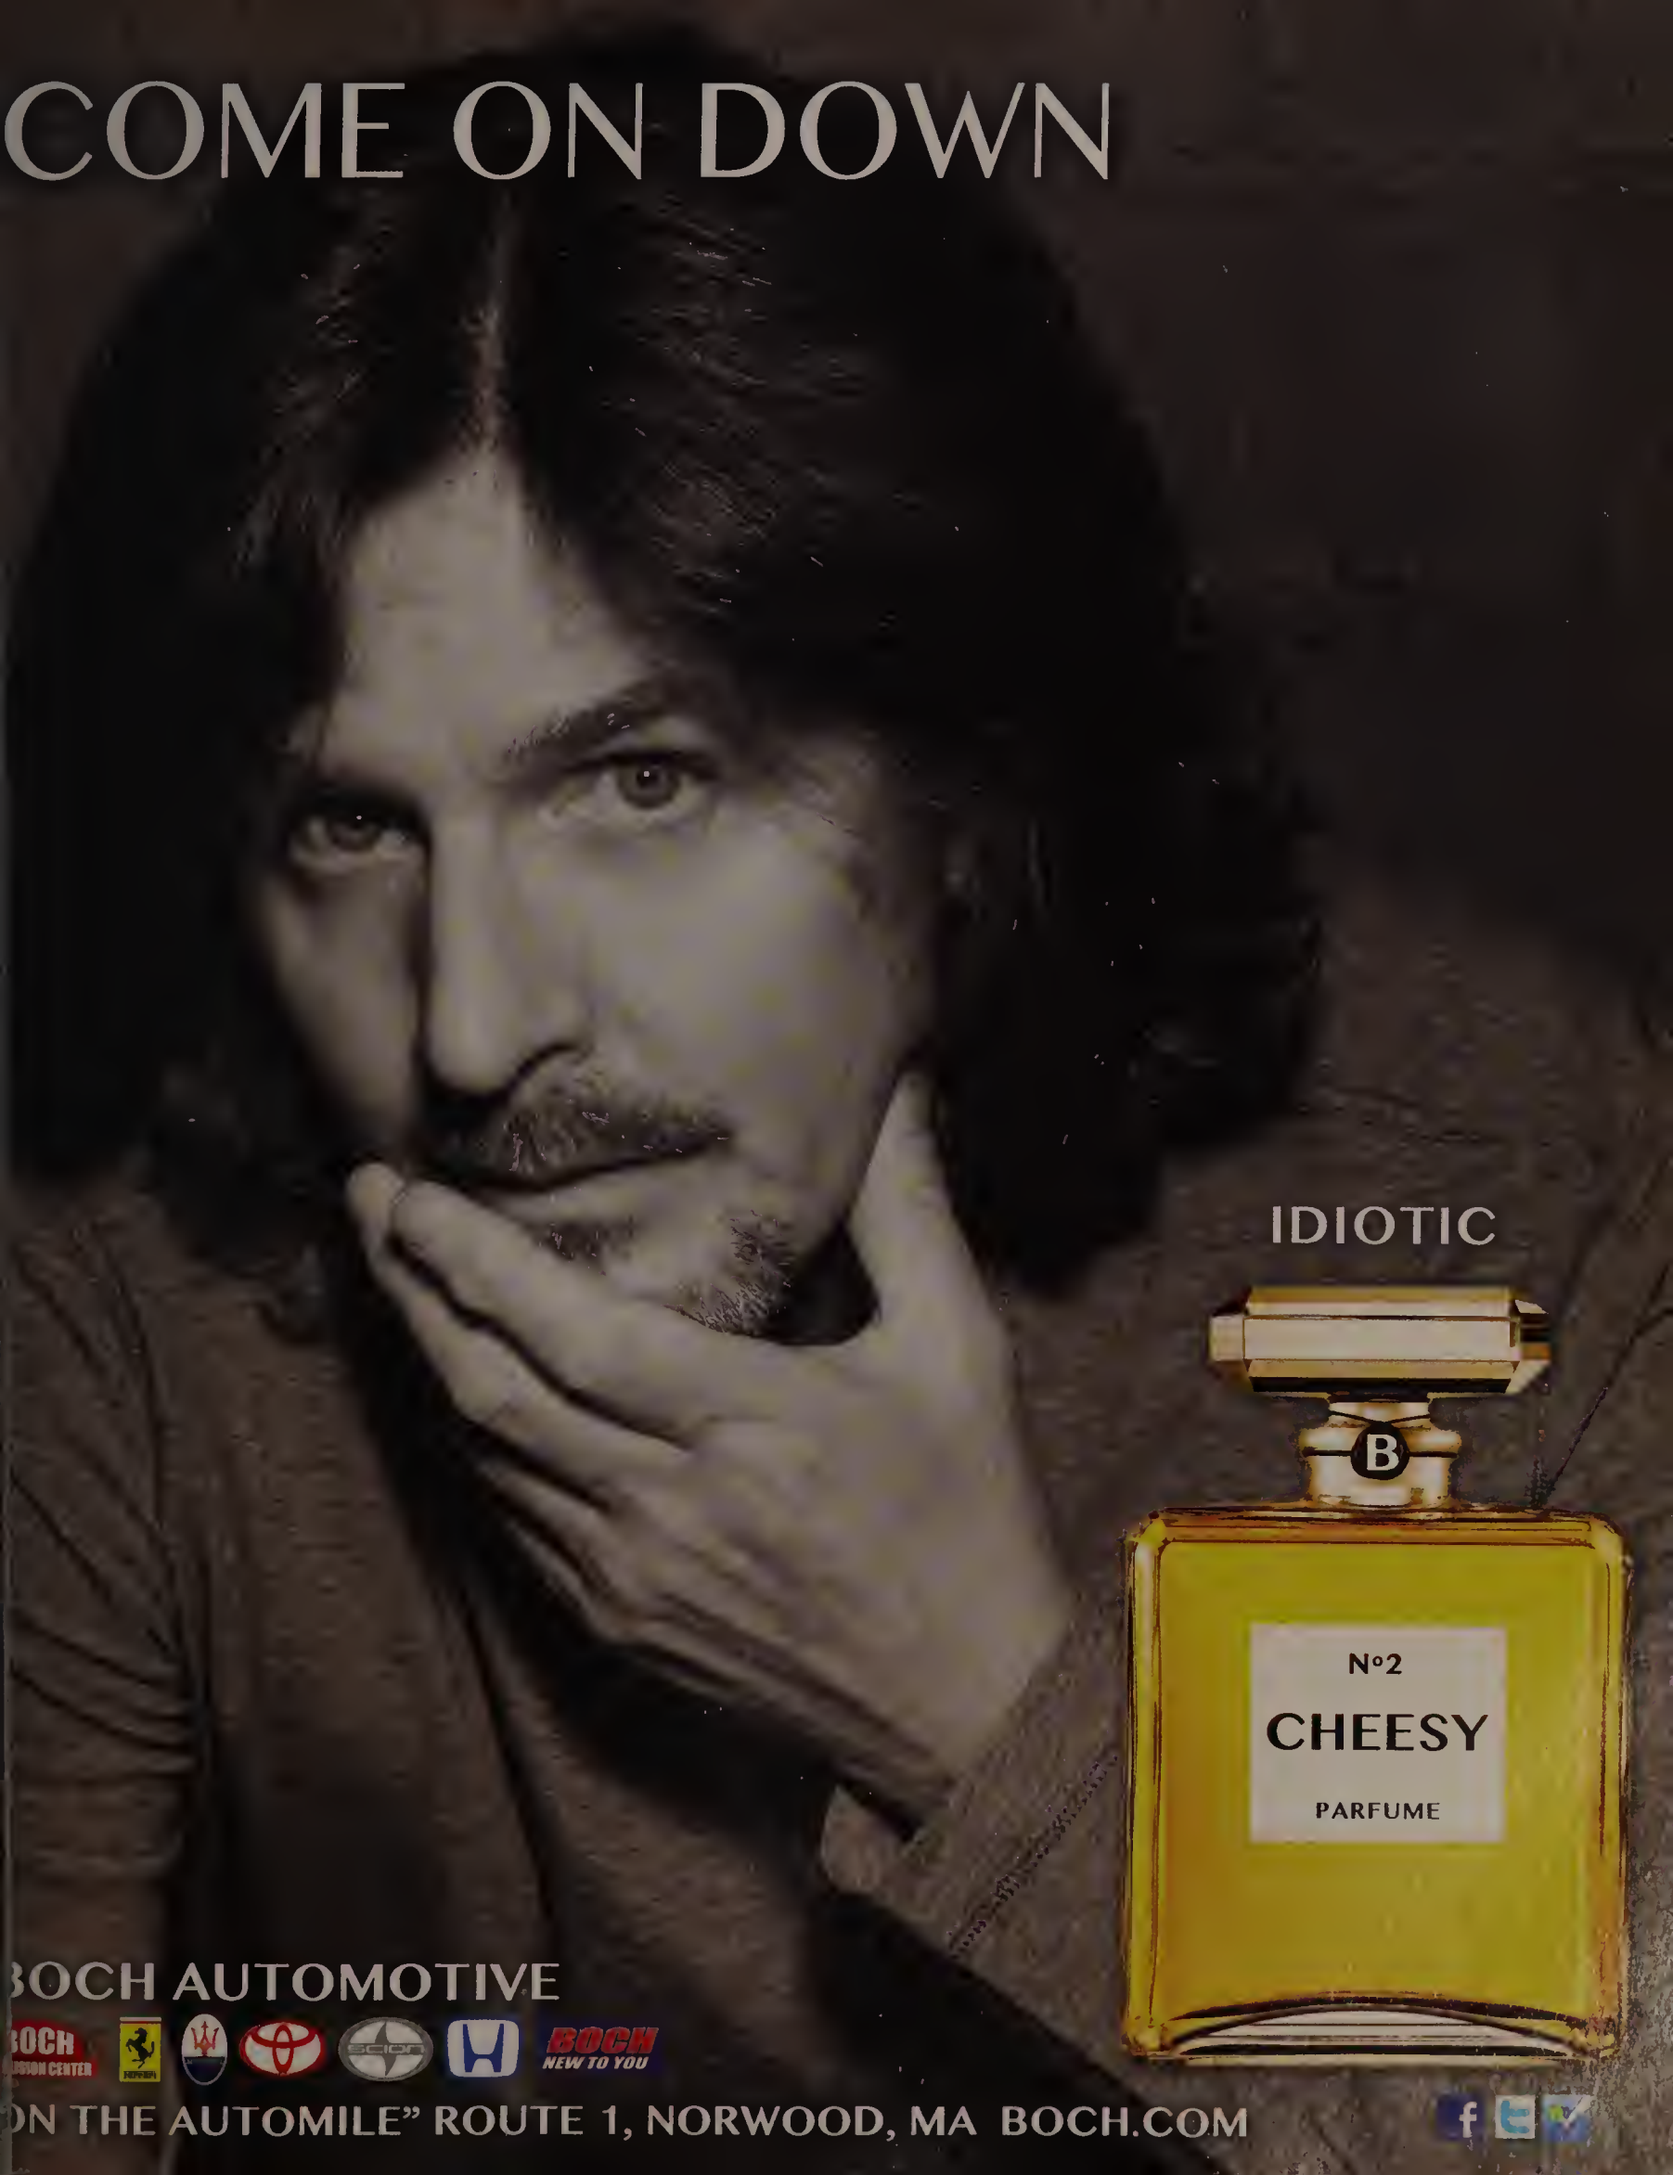
IT USED TO BE THE MOST confounding part of the Academy Awards telecast, when the show would grind to a halt and reward short subjects that none of the viewers at home had any chance of ever seeing. What were these mysterious films the celebrities spoke so glowingly about, and why did they always throw off my score in the Oscar pool?

Thankfully, in recent years, some enterprising souls at Magnolia Pictures have gathered the nominated shorts for brief theatrical runs. This year, the live-action and animated nominees are showing at the Kendall Square Cinema, and the documentary shorts are screening at the Coolidge Corner Theatre. Furthermore, the whole lot of them will be available for rent on iTunes or your Video on Demand provider starting Feb. 19, so you'll have a few days to cram before the big show.



Though notoriously weak over the past couple of seasons, this year's crop of live action shorts rebounds quite nicely, with a fresh international flavor and some distinctive visions. The program kicks off to an impressive start with veteran commercial director Bryan Buckley's Asad, the heartbreaking tale of a young Somali boy who idolizes the violent pirates in his community, not realizing until its almost too late that his village needs more fishermen than gunmen. The cast is comprised of Somali refugees, and Buckley doesn't flinch from the day-to-day brutality in a war-torn land with little in the way of hope.

Similarly themed but less effective is Sam French's Buzkashi Boys, which the press notes trumpet as one of the first fiction films shot on location in Kabul. It's a maudlin tale of two preteen boys, one a beggar and the other a blacksmith's son, growing up in squalor and finding solace in the title sport—which appears to be a variation on horse polo played with a dead goat. Perhaps it's the poor camera technique that renders the game even more confusing than quidditch, but French seems more interested in his location than the story he's trying to tell. The longest of the entries at a comparatively bloated 28 minutes, Buzkashi Boys leans too hard on an overemphatic musical score, tugging on the heartstrings and belaboring points that Asad shrewdly implied. The ending is admirably unresolved, but you'll feel a bit jerked around getting there.

More strikingly original is Tom Van Avermaet's Death of a Shadow, a surreal, supernatural vision with shades of Guillermo Del Toro and Jean-Pierre Jeunet's early work. Rust and Bone's bare-knuckle brawler Matthias Schoenaerts stars as a soldier killed in World War I, suspended in a steampunk limbo and using a futuristic camera to capture souls that are later displayed on the wall of a sinister collector. Avermaet is cagey with the rules of his universe, allowing viewers to soak in the lush, foreboding imagery and only gradually put the pieces together. This storytelling gambit keeps a central love story from landing perhaps the way it should, but the film is so visually immersive that it's obviously the sign of a major talent.

I wish I could say the same for Yan England's Henry, which follows an elderly concert pianist succumbing to dementia. England keeps us locked in to the protagonist's point of view, rendering the flashbacks and hallucinations as a continuous stream of consciousness. Once you've figured out the gimmick, there's not much left to chew on. (And didn't we all just go through this with Amour?) It also loses points for overusing Pietro Mascagni's Cavalleria Rusticana, which is terribly distracting because we all know it better as the theme from Raging Bull.

My favorite of the lot is Shawn Christensen's wonderfully stylish Curfew, which stars the director as a drug-addled layabout whose latest suicide attempt is interrupted when he's forced to babysit his estranged, precocious niece. No points for guessing that the bratty kid and her listless uncle grow fond of one another over the course of the evening. There's more than a touch of You Can Count on Me here, a comparison Christensen encourages by doing his best Mark Ruffalo impression. Curfew's clever compositions and an inspired bowling alley dance number make the familiar material feel brand new, and of these five shorts it's the one I'd be happy to see extended into a feature. ✖✖✖

CRAZY FINGERS

GRATEFUL DEAD GURU JERRY Garcia once hailed Steve Kimock as his favorite unknown guitarist. "That was sweet of him," Kimock says, "and unsolicited." In turn, after Garcia's death in 1995, the Dead's surviving members solicited Kimock for offshoot bands Phil Lesh and Friends, the Rhythm Devils and Bob Weir's RatDog, as well as their joint juggernaut the Other Ones.

"I was there," Kimock, 57, says of the reason he connected with members of San Francisco's institution of psychedelic rock. "It was a very small community, and I played well enough that I got noticed. I guess I was an agreeable enough guy most of the time, so I got asked back."

The laid-back virtuoso, who could reinterpret Garcia's lines with a clean-toned melodicism that favors fluidity over ferocity, has shined in other stellar musical combos. In the mid-'80s, Kimock cofounded the jazz-rock outfit Zero, which included ex–Quicksilver Messenger Service great John Cipollina and laid groundwork for the jam bands of the '90s. Although Kimock dismisses the jam-band tag. "That's not a measure of anything," he says. "It was a slur."

He's since played with everyone from Bruce Hornsby to ex-Zappa sideman Ray White, who joined Kimock, drummer Alan Hertz and Zero bassist Bobby Vega in launching KVHW. That respected quartet evolved into the Steve Kimock Band, which brought upstarts Robert Walter and Reed Mathis through its ranks. The guitarist also tapped soulful, upbeat sounds in Steve Kimock Crazy Engine with his son, drummer John Morgan Kimock, and organist Melvin Seals.

However, Kimock's latest quartet—with onetime Funkadelic/Talking Heads keyboardist Bernie Worrell, former David Lindley/Sheryl Crow drummer Wally Ingram, and ex–Gov't Mule/Black Crowes bassist Andy Hess—could be his most intriguing, sly and synergistic group to date.

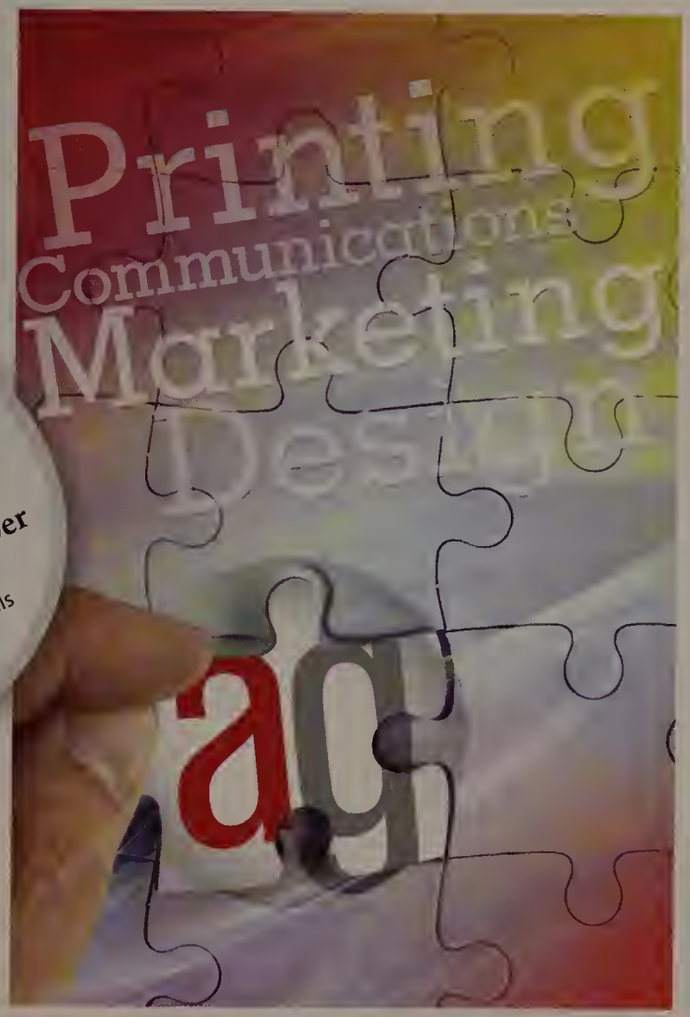
"I like the ensemble chemistry and trust and humor they have," Kimock says of his bandmates, who join him at the Brighton Music Hall on Feb. 22. "It's really fun and very powerful, a very happy band, a bunch of guys that walk onto the stage laughing and walk off the stage laughing."

Then there's the free-flowing groove they share onstage. Ingram adapts to any style or tempo, spicing his rhythms with metallic percussion tucked around his kit. Hess injects meaty ballast, and Worrell brings his uniquely funky feel and minimalism to the largely instrumental mix.

"Bernie's a master," Kimock says of Worrell, who was classically trained as a child and attended New England Conservatory. Today he focuses on the organ, synthesizer and a clavinet that has keys laminated with comic strips. "The superficial thing is there's the classical piano with the cartoon synthesizer dichotomy," Kimock says, "and the more you look at it, you realize how deep it is."

For his part, Kimock plays several guitars but eschews demonstrative posturing and prefers to sit. "The way the guitar's borne on the leg is so much better, a lot more relaxed," he says. "I'm not one of those type-A personality guys."

Growing up in Bethlehem, Pa., he drew inspiration from an aunt who was a folksinger, but his musical path was sealed when an older cousin returned from a tour of duty in Germany with a gold-top Les Paul electric that Kimock still plays. He tuned into the Beatles, Traffic and Allman Brothers as well as the raw blues of Johnny Winter and the Indian classical music of Ravi Shankar.



After high school, Kimock headed for California with his then-band, the Goodman Brothers. "We loaded a van and a station wagon with everything we owned and drove away from this giant snowstorm," says Kimock. "I had culture shock from growing up in this little steel town where nothing was happening to getting dropped a few miles north of San Francisco in Marin County where everybody was hanging out and playing."

That included the Dead. "I'd probably met all the guys in the band fairly early on," Kimock says. "Phil Lesh picked me up hitchhiking, in the rain.... I said 'Do you have any advice for a guy in a band?' And he said, 'Yes, stick with it. Just keep going.'" ✖✖✖

The B's look Grade A.

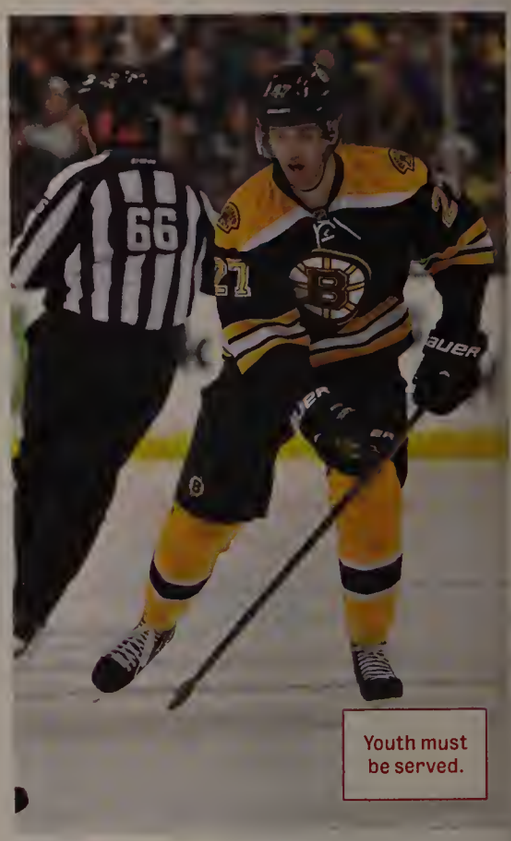
THE CITY OF CHAMPIONS moniker that Boston wore so proudly for a few short years has gone the way of the flip phone. Never was a region more dominant. Never had a city planned more parades, as the duck boats, once strictly for tourists, became synonymous with local victory. Now, Titletown is a thing of the past.

The Red Sox are in quicksand. The Celtics are losing their battle with Father Time. As for our trusted Patriots, well, turns out Lombardi Trophies aren't as easy to collect as we thought. (All you have to know about the new New England Patriots is that before the AFC Championship, the Bill Belichick–Tom Brady tandem was 67-0 when leading at Gillette Stadium at halftime. They're now 67-1.) Even our former governor, Mitt Romney, finished a distant second in the presidential election. Somebody, please tell me what happened to all the winners around here?



If you'll notice, the Bruins dodged that loser's list. I have a feeling that maybe, for the second time in three years, the Cup will be hoisted in Boston. The Bruins, who've started the lockout-shortened season with a bang, couldn't have picked a better time to take over New England, just like they did decades earlier.

Yes, work stoppages have damaged the sport. People get fed up when billionaires squabble with millionaires. But hockey fans have a soft spot for the game they adore. One thing about the NHL is that, while it doesn't have the greatest number of followers, its fan base is one of the most loyal and passionate.

Something develops during those early morning trips to the rink, getting little boys and girls ready for practice. Those roots run deep and permeate the fiber of the hockey fan. The sacrifice of a hockey parent is unmatched by any other sport. The pre-dawn chill and a large Dunkin' Donuts becomes part of a cherished ritual.

When the NHL announced that hockey would be back, fans couldn't stay angry. They bought mounds and mounds of tickets, to the point where scalpers were collecting triple face value for opening night.

At first glance, I see as much depth on this Bruins team as on any I've followed. Everyone can contribute. I also see a bunch of guys who've proven they know how to dig deep to earn a win (something our other three teams have seemed incapable of lately). The best part is the Bruins look built for the long haul, equipped with stars barely over drinking age. Heck, 19-year-old defenseman Dougie Hamilton could be on the path to greatness. (Bobby Orr and Ray Bourque started in their teens. I'm just throwing it out there.)

Youth must be served.

The big question in this short season is the new man between the pipes. Tuukka Rask has yet to show that he can perform consistently. I'm not talking about monthly spurts, like the incredible spans in the 2009-2010 season when he played 45 games due to a Tim Thomas injury. Tuukka Time has to last from day one through the playoffs. He's working on a one-year deal worth $3.5 million, but the rumor is he'll be offered $20 million for three years going forward. The guy is 25 and might be one of the best in the world. If he can step up, the Bruins should lock him up.

For Rask, the tricky thing about this season is there's no learning curve. With only 48 games scheduled—coach Claude Julien says he'll start about 30—there's little time to work into a groove. This season isn't a marathon; it's an all-out sprint. Rask keeps it simple, saying, "I still have to play good no matter what, right? It doesn't matter if it's one game or 80."

True, but it also means the maturation of Hamilton and the other youngsters will have to accelerate. Paired right out of the gate with the great Zdeno Chara, Hamilton, fresh from playing juniors in Canada, has shown maturity beyond his years. By just the third game of the season, Hamilton had already awed Julien, who gave him a huge chunk of power-play time under the bright lights of Madison Square Garden. Julien was glowing after handing those key minutes to his newest rookie. "Anybody who watched the game tonight had to see this guy was outstanding; not good, outstanding," said Julien. "If anybody thinks he can't play in this league, he should just take some time and watch tonight's game."

And finally, the most important piece of the championship puzzle has to be the emergence of Improper cover model Tyler Seguin. As the Bruins' premier scorer (and best player), we know the former second overall pick has an incredibly high ceiling with unmatched skill when the puck is on his tape. Seguin has been criticized in the past for his matador defense, but his willingness to work has improved that aspect of his game. Yet his true value is his vision. He can see how a play will unfold and has an uncanny ability to find the back of the net.

We know what we're going to get from vets like Chara, Patrice Bergeron and Shawn Thorton. Even Nathan Horton looks like he's back to his old self. The key is this triumvirate of young talent. As they go, so go the Bruins. And I say they go far. ✖✖✖

MONEY TALKS

Investment advice for interesting times

Going for broke?

WE CAREEN FROM CRISIS to crisis as if we're living under siege (which we are in certain ways), in good part because of the communications revolution that leaves everyone with almost no privacy. Recently, I visited a friend in a building downtown that houses a large ad agency. On my elevator rides, the car was full of young people dressed like vagrants with scrubbed faces. Every trip up and down, none of them ever talked to one another. They were on their smart phones or tablets, even to ride two floors.

This reinforces one eternal truth. More than ever in this increasingly impersonal society, if you're effective in face-to-face situations, you'll always get jobs. And you'll move up the ladder as well. Pay attention to your personal relationships, not just virtual ones. In this regard, I asked several of the advertising kids going down in the elevator, "Where do you see yourself when you're 40 years old?"

They all basically replied, "Forty? I can't even think about being 29." Good luck, I say. There are businesses that chew up and spit out young people: advertising, television, movies, magazines. You better have a goal and a dream because time flips by; snap of the fingers. Even my troubleshooting personal geek tells me, "I make my living solving computer problems. But if my life completely depended upon only digital, I'd be lost."

So even if you don't care about where you're going to be at 40, you perhaps do care about building up some net worth for yourselves. Almost everyone who comes to see me for the first time in my money management business longs for the same thing: the F word, which is freedom. And few have it.

For millions of Americans, the only way they seem to save any money is through their retirement plans: 401(k)s, IRAs. And in your company plans, the many choices almost exclusively offer mutual funds or, if you work for a public company, you'll have a choice, most likely, of accumulating company stock. So many clients and friends working for public companies ask me what to do with this option. Here's my advice, which is somewhat unconventional. If you are under 50 years old, go for long-term growth and be somewhat aggressive. Ask yourself a key question: "Do I really want to be rich, even though I'll never own a business?" I had a mentor in the financial world, a charismatic leader who taught me in the 1970s to "concentrate, not diversify, if you really want to have some net worth." For me, he was absolutely right—risky but right. So, if the company you work for seems positioned to really succeed and grow in the future, you should own the stock. And, when inevitable bumps come along and markets go lower, be disciplined. As your stock declines and you still believe in its future, buy more, especially when people are fearful.

My choice for funds in 401(k)s would favor those which emphasize growth plus income, or those specializing in the great global brand companies, mostly American, with fortress-like financial strength, particularly ones that pay dividends. Dividends do matter, in my view, especially in tax-free, tax-deferred retirement plans. This cash flow should add a lot to your total return. And again, if you're under 50, you can concentrate, or overweight the portfolio in these sectors. It's unconventional, but I still have more than 75 percent of my liquid assets in equities. I believe if you presume to give advice in these matters, you should eat your own cooking.

Many people think that markets have been volatile since the meltdown of the financial system, starting in late 2007. In truth, we're going on 13 years of tough stock markets since the beginning of this century, when the dot.com bubble burst. It's practically a generation of Americans now who think that nothing can be any good ever again. I believe that we haven't reversed cycles in these last dozen years. And that sooner or later we'll see greed replace anxiety and fear in financial markets.

"OK," someone said to me recently. "So when are you going to sell?"

"I'll start to sell," I replied, "when the phones in our office are ringing off the hooks with people saying, 'I can't wait to put money into the stock market.' No one, it seems to me, is saying that. Anxiety rules. And, as long as it does, I'm going to be in there, betting that it ain't over yet for America."

Why may this be all wrong for you? If you believe, as some do, that it's all over for this country, that we're on the slippery slide to second-rate nation status, then fine, keep your money on the sidelines at almost zero percent interest rates. But in many ways, betting on positive stock markets is a bet on your own personal future. And if you believe it's a bad bet, what does that say about you? ×××

VOICE OF A GENERATION

Apple's hiring someone to punch up Siri's script. It's about time.

EVEN IF YOU DON'T HAVE an iPhone, you've probably heard of Siri, Apple's voice-activated assistant. Among Siri's party tricks is an ability to answer offbeat or rhetorical questions with a particular brand of robotic sass. For instance, if you ask Siri what she looks like, she might reply, "Shiny." Her range of responses is wide enough to give the impression that an algorithm invents them on the fly, but Siri's material is actually preprogrammed—a script written by a human being. And, according to a recent LinkedIn job listing, Apple is looking for a writer to broaden that script. Hey Siri, what has two thumbs and great communication skills? OK, yes, a lowland gorilla. I see we have work to do.

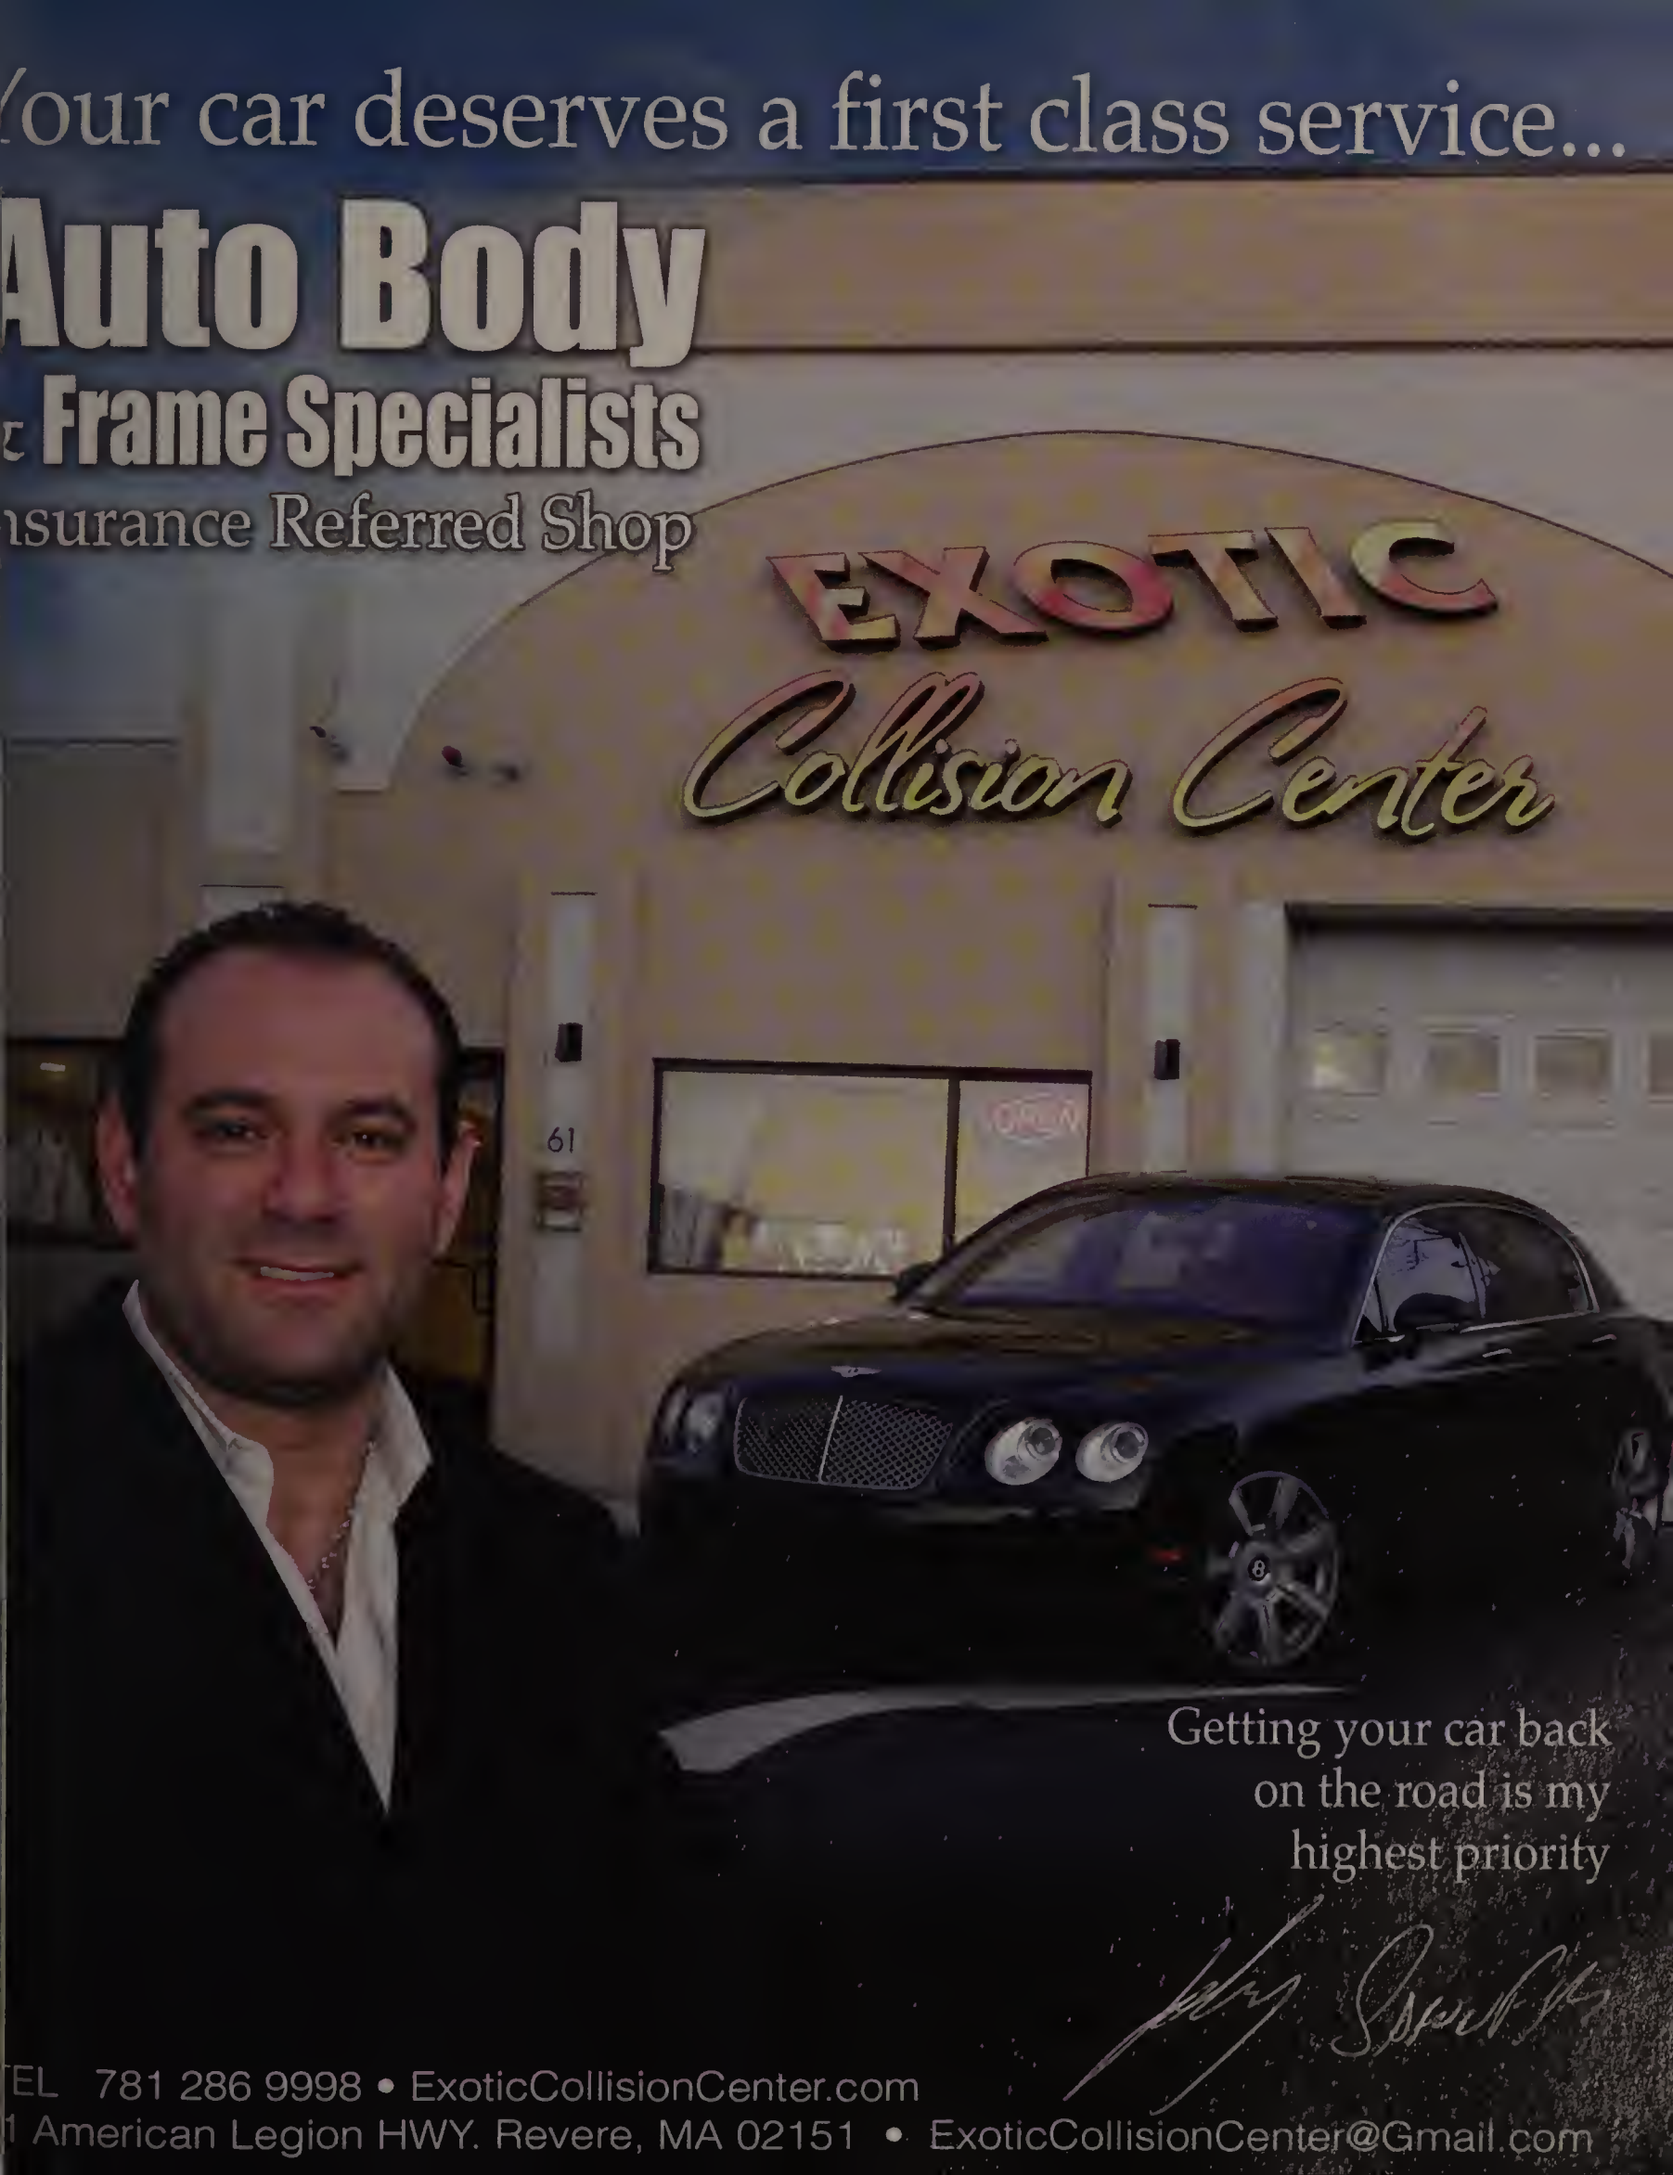
The job listing reads, "The ideal candidate is someone who combines a love for language, wordplay and conversation with demonstrated experience in bringing creative content to life within an intense technical environment." That totally describes me, except for the part about bringing creative content to life within an intense technical environment. But come on—if I write the wacky Siri responses, I'm sure Apple can find some nerd to put them into the phone somehow. Just say, "Siri, find me a computer dork," and she'll reply, "Nerds ahoy!" and a compass will appear and point toward MIT. See, Apple, hire me and there's more where that came from.

My iPhone is a dumb old 4, so I don't have Siri myself. But my impression is that the people who are wildly entertained by Siri are the same ones who spend an hour at Stop & Shop laughing at the birthday cards. So this job should be a piece of cake. In the event that you ask a question that I didn't anticipate, your phone will just default to a photo of a golden retriever wearing a backwards baseball cap and barking, "I Ruff You!"

Apple says its ideal job candidate will be someone who can help "evolve Siri as a distinct, recognizable character," but I think Siri's character should adapt to your own personality. Siri could take a look at your contacts, browser history and apps and customize her responses accordingly. For instance, if you recently downloaded a Louis C.K. performance, Siri would become self-deprecating and vulgar. So if you asked her, "What's the way to San Jose?" she'd say, "I'll tell you when I'm done eating this hoagie on the toilet. God, I hate myself."

Or, if you'd recently browsed the Pottery Barn Kids website and asked Siri for some good baby names, she'd say, "Charleston if it's a boy and Hadley Socrates if it's a girl." If you then asked her why Pottery Barn puts such pretentious names on its catalog merchandise, she'd reply, "If you've got a problem with it, go shop at L.L. Bean and put me back in the pocket of your pleated jeans."

While Apple doesn't explicitly say so in its job description, it seems the task of enlivening Siri is as much about anticipating dumb questions as it is contriving droll answers. Siri's programmer must predict that at some point Apple's robo-assistant will be asked if she'd accept an arranged marriage with a Samsung Galaxy. She'll be asked the square root of blueberry pie. She'll be asked why her butt smells. You don't get answers without questions—lots of stupid questions.



I don't want to brag, but people tell me that I ask a lot of those. Just the other day I asked, "Do I need to take my shirt off?" before I got my flu shot. And that's how I ended up taking my shirt off in Rite Aid. So I guess you could say it wasn't a stupid question so much as a stupid idea to wear a long-sleeve gym shirt to get a flu shot.

Since Apple sells its products worldwide, it's also looking for someone with a bit of international cultural fluency. Say you ask a French iPhone who the best actor is, maybe it'd tell you Gérard Depardieu. If you asked a German iPhone the same question, it'd say David Hasselhoff. And if you asked a Chinese iPhone, it'd say, "Get back to work or you will be reported to the Party." The Chinese iPhone would be easy, because that's what it'd say to everything.

Apple's Siri Cyrano won't just be developing new turns of phrase—Apple's also looking for someone to "refresh and refine existing Siri dialogue." That's good to know, because the "meaning of life" responses are pretty lame and should probably be replaced by quotes from Matthew McConaughey. That guy has it all figured out if you ask me.

And soon enough, you will be asking me. Siri, how do I format a résumé? ✖✖✖

Soroff On TYLER SEGUIN

The Bruins star shoots off about endorsement deals, locker room pranks and female B.U. students.

BRUINS CENTER/RIGHT WING TYLER SEGUIN, 21, WAS BORN AND raised in Brampton, Ontario, where he began playing hockey for the Whitby Wildcats. He played in the Ontario Hockey League and in 2010 was the No. 2 prospect in the NHL draft. He made his debut with the Bruins in 2010 and earned his first goal during his second game. He has won one Stanley Cup championship in 2011 and played in the 2012 NHL All-Star game. That season, he led the team in scoring, becoming the youngest player in the team's history to earn that distinction. During the NHL lockout that shortened the current season, he played for EHC Biel in the Swiss National Hockey League. He lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: How did you entertain yourself in Switzerland during the lockout?
Tyler Seguin: I actually did a lot of cooking, which I've never done before. That, and go to movies in German, or English if I was lucky. We had a lot of poker nights, too.

In Europe, did you really try to use a dryer as a washing machine?
That stuff was all a bunch of B.S. Apparently, one of the maids got approached by a big newspaper and she completely exaggerated. I left some change on the table and they said it was like 280 euros, which is ridiculous. It was all pretty much a bunch of lies.

How worried were you that there wasn't going to be an NHL season?
There were plenty of days when I'd get a text or voice mail while I was asleep saying, "Pack your bags. You're going home in the morning." And then five hours later, I'd wake up to another message saying, "Never mind. False alarm." That started getting annoying. But we tried to stay in the loop over there, and in the end, I'm just glad that everything worked out the way it did because it will help us in the long run. There were problems in the system that are resolved now.

Favorite snack at the Garden?
A bagel with peanut butter and jelly.

Any superstitions before going on the ice?
It's weird. I try to be anti-superstitious, I guess you could say. If I go out and have a good game, I'll change things the next time, like wear a different pair of gloves.

Best locker room prank you ever pulled?
Last year, I taped Brad Marchand's shoes together.

How many pictures do you have of you with the Stanley Cup?
Way too many. On my phone, probably eight or nine, and my mom back in Canada has at least 20 framed ones.

Most unconventional thing you've done with it?
We came back to the hotel after a day with the Cup and I needed a shower, so I took a shower with it. Those photos were deleted within five minutes.

Greatest hockey player of all time?
Steve Yzerman. He's just my favorite player, and it's cool that I've gotten to know him a little bit.

Who's the toughest player on the Bruins?
The best fighter? Zdeno Chara, obviously. But in terms of agility, Shawn Thornton.

One NHL player you don't want to meet in a dark alley?
There's one guy, Zenon Konopka, I just don't like playing with him.

Worst injury?
Last year, I had a really bad knuckle injury that I played with for the rest of the season, and it was one of the most painful periods of hockey I've had, because I couldn't do anything without it hurting like crazy.

Are all your teeth your own?
Yes, they're all mine.

The Whitby Wildcats. Worst team name ever?
[Laughs.] Yes. And the thing is that I also played on the lacrosse team, which was called the Whitby Warriors. So it was Wildcats in the winter and Warriors in the summer. I was quite the predator.

Think you could be on Skating With the Stars*?*
Probably not. But I'm a good dancer off the ice.

Dream endorsement deal?
Before this year it probably would've been Breitling watches, because they're my favorite, but while I was in Switzerland, I had a deal with them, which was pretty nice.

So maybe a company like Ferrari?
No. I have a nice car. I drive a Maserati.

OK, then, endorsement deal you'd never want?
Viagra. That would be embarrassing.

Which is nastier: The Bruins locker room after practice or a ladies' room at 2 am in a club?
Definitely the ladies' room. Hands down.

So what goes on in Brampton, Ontario?
Absolutely nothing, aside from a couple of shootings now and then. It's a pretty tough place.

Strongest characteristic as a player?
I'd like to think it's a tie between quick release and skating.

So you're a 21-year-old and you make $900K a year. What's your biggest extravagance?
I guess clothes. I like to shop at Barneys and Neiman Marcus, Saks Fifth Avenue.

What food is your version of Popeye's spinach?
Salmon with honey. Night before game, day of game. Always.

Beauty secrets?
[Laughs.] I'm pretty low-maintenance. My go-to cologne is Zara. I've been using it for four years. Other than that, I've never had a problem with acne or anything, so I pretty much just shower and go.

How about all the rumors about you and the Playboy model or every female B.U. student?
The Playboy model, we went out a couple of times. As for every female B.U. student, it's a big school. But seriously? Every two days someone comes up to me and asks about a girl I'm supposedly seeing. I'm very single. ✖✖✖

ACES OF HEARTS

Our Annual Pick of Boston's Most Eligible Singles

BY JONATHAN SOROFF ■ PHOTOGRAPHED BY ADAM DETOUR AT THE HAWTHORNE

According to the latest statistics

(i.e., a careless Google search),

the online dating business in the U.S. alone generates more than a billion dollars a year. Then there are all the other ways of profiting from the unattached: match-making and wingman services, the promoters who sell overpriced drinks to lovelorn clubbers, the whole industrial dinner-and-a-movie complex, and Million-aire Matchmaker Patti Stanger screaming at you from her dragon's lair at Bravo.

But, of course, most desirable singles don't care that they're single. They've got plenty else going on in their lives. They're grounded, well-rounded individuals who, if they perhaps haven't embraced singlehood, at least haven't had singlehood thrust upon them.

That's the premise behind this issue. Our eclectic group of 20 unspoken-for's was, as always, compiled scientifically. We used a complex algorithm of readers' votes, friends' suggestions, a meddling in-law or two and countless Facebook searches. Then we threw them a party at the glamorous, sexy Storyville nightclub. There, under the soft lights and the muted fleur-de-lis motifs, with the music tuned just so and the bartender pouring silky Belvedere Vodka cocktails, we let the sparks fly. It was a stimulating evening. A night in a beautiful room with 24-carat drinks and fascinating, attractive people is the definition of time well spent.

We hope you enjoy getting to know our bachelors and bachelorettes as much as we did.

Steve Napoli, 26

*Owner, Snap Top Market

Last fall, this fourth-generation green grocer opened one of the hottest spots in the South End. selling a meticulously curated selection of fine produce and gourmet goodies. After graduating early from UConn, he set out to see the world, visiting six of the seven continents, working at a winery in California, building barns in Montana and backpacking across Europe. Indifferent to fashion and admittedly underdressed most of the time, he considers an ideal date a baseball game (yes, he's a Red Sox fan), eating food you'll regret later, anything cultural (especially if it's off-the-wall) or sampling something (whether it's food, music or an experience) he's never tried before. Despite his free-spiritedness, he's a solid businessman and loves talking start-ups and how companies came to be. For fun, he puts in his earbuds and blisses out mountain biking or running. Although he claims not to be particularly romantic, he cites sipping a glass of red wine in Italy or Argentina as nice things to do. A member of a secret minority—country music fans from Mass.—he's also a coffee connoisseur without being a bore about it.

Kate Beaman, 30

*Director of operations, The Cronin Group

She grew up on the Cape but can't swim. That said, she was a star athlete in soccer, track & field and road races. A 4.0 GPA in high school didn't stop her from painting, singing in the chorus or playing violin. At Colby-Sawyer, MassArt and Cambridge College, she studied fine arts, graphic design and business management—which merged into a job as director of operations at the Cronin Group, the restaurateurs behind Jerry Remy's Sports Bar and Grill, Temazcal Tequila Cantina, the Boston Beer Garden, etc. In her spare time, she models and does freelance design work. Her desire to please everyone 24/7 is key to her success in the hospitality industry, but she recognizes the downside, which is being driven, determined and sometimes stubborn. Her friends tell her she intimidates men, and her nicknames—MacGyver, Kate Middleton, Wonder Woman, Queen B, Mrs. Fixit, and most frequently, Boss Lady—are telling. She doesn't date much, but she's a firm believer in fate.

David Ng, 36

*Co-owner, Hops N Scotch & Coolidge Corner Wine & Spirits

Born and raised on Long Island, he was peeling onions for his family's restaurant business before he could ride a bike. Six years ago, he and a partner opened Coolidge Corner Wine & Spirits and turned it into an instant success. When the space two doors down became available, they launched a restaurant, Hops N Scotch. After a mere six months in business, it's another homerun, and they now have roughly 30 full- and 20 part-time employees. He takes pride in the carefully curated and constantly updated inventory of his store and makes a point of having fun despite all his hard work. "I try to have a fun in life to make up for a lost childhood," he says, and his outgoing, exuberant personality is proof. Determined to succeed and highly motivated, he believes that you have to get up in the morning and move your life in the right direction. He credits his parents for his impressive build and himself for his "life of the party" joie de vivre. Bonus points for having "lucky earlobes."

Meghan Brady, 29

*Events and marketing manager, Trade

After graduating from McGill, this Maine native traveled a bit (working at bars in Dublin) and settled here, where one of her first gigs was at this magazine. She moved to New York to build her resume, working for clients like Mercedes-Benz Fashion Week and Perez Hilton. Now, she's the events and marketing manager at the sizzling Waterfront restaurant Trade. After eight months, her Bay Village apartment remains largely undecorated. She's of the school that nothing beats a handwritten note, and that if a guy asks her out, the first date is on him. Tolerant of her married friends who constantly try to set her up, she's the classically conflict-averse middle child. That also means she's low drama, and the Maine in her keeps her grounded. An admittedly bad driver, she walks or rides her bike everywhere (hence the fabulous legs). Last August, she helped raise more than $75,000 for Dana-Farber by riding in the Pan-Mass Challenge. A girl on the go, she likes making game day decisions and guys who can take an impulsive weekend trip. Her ideal date: Dinner and wine Even more ideal? Dinner and wine that you have to fly somewhere to enjoy.

Kim McLarin, 40+

Novelist/assistant professor, Emerson College

If her life were made into an Oxygen network documentary, it'd look too good to be true. This Memphis native won a scholarship to Exeter, which produced both her lifelong ambivalence toward snow and her first novel. After graduating from Duke, she worked as a journalist for the Associated Press and eventually The New York Times. She's now published three novels and is an assistant professor in the writing, literature and publishing department at Emerson College, with a kind-of memoir called Divorce Dog: Men, Motherhood and Midlife coming out in March. All the while, she's raising two kids and still has the time to chair the board of a charter school, serve as a regular commentator on WGBH's Basic Black and practice yoga often enough that it shows. Her ideal date is a walk in the Arboretum, wandering a bookstore or a glass of wine with French fries. She has a quick, dry wit and arresting eyes and prefers the ocean to almost anywhere. As for romance, she says, "Being seen—really seen—is the most romantic thing in the world." Want to know more? Read her books.

Vyda Bielkus, 36

Cofounder, Health Yoga Life

One of four sisters raised by a single mom, this blonde beauty attended the all-girls Dana Hall School and Wellesley College. Thank God for her uncles, she says, since they turned her into a huge Patriots, Red Sox and Celtics fan. After three years at a high-tech start-up, she kicked off her heels for the barefoot life of a yoga teacher. Now she runs her own show at Health Yoga Life, a wellness and yoga studio she founded with her three sisters in Beacon Hill. A vegetarian with a fondness for tall men, her idea of romance is 4 pm on the beach, when the sunlight is just perfect, or walking along Comm. Ave. when the magnolias and dogwood are in bloom. Her ideal mate would be an alpha male with the goods to back it up, especially since he'd be entering a highly matriarchal family. Admittedly not terribly gifted in the kitchen, she does make a mean plate of nachos, and her winsome smile would melt the heart of the frostiest gentleman. The Bond-girl name doesn't hurt, either.

Erin Butner, 28
Art Director, Arnold Worldwide

A recent transplant from California, this West Coast girl studied fine art and journalism, but after working as a digital art director in San Francisco, she accepted a job at Arnold Worldwide in Boston, despite knowing no one here. Her ability to laugh at most things and her keen sense of adventure are hallmarks of her personality, and she loves exploring New England or traveling to new places, especially if it involves the outdoors and good food and drink. Her high-powered job occasionally spills over into her personal life (she admits to art-directing her cupboards), and she maintains a positive attitude about the singles scene, saying, "A bad date makes for a good story." At the end of the day, she says, "I'm a simple girl. All I need is good food, great people, some libations, a bike to ride and a pen to draw monsters with." That easygoing, happy-go-lucky charm is what makes us think she's such a great catch.

Paulo Arrais, 25

Principal dancer, Boston Ballet

Bringing sexy back is something Brazil has never had to do, and he's proof. This multilingual modern-day Nijinsky studied at the Paris Opera Ballet and the Royal Ballet schools, won numerous prizes and danced with the Norwegian National Ballet before being snatched up by Boston Ballet, rising through the ranks to stardom. What he likes in a guy? Not a dancer, and someone who's comfortable with himself. His boyish charm belies a confident, sensual and nutty (in a good way) person who's passionate about the arts and has a fiery Latin side (in a good way). He can be impatient—not surprising for someone who can do a split in midair while filing his nails. It also comes as no surprise that his body should be cast in bronze, but men who can't see past this bore him. The place he feels safest is on stage, but don't mistake him for a drama queen. He's probably the most upbeat person you'll ever meet. In the romance department, he deserves props for knowing Paris like a native, although he considers Capri a decent alternative. The twinkle in his eye earns him bonus points.

Michelle O'Neil, 29

Director, Keller Augusta Partners

This delightfully bubbly brunette graduated from Thayer Academy before studying economics at Trinity College, where she was captain of the women's hockey team (her other sports include tennis and golf). Unashamedly preppy—Nantucket is a favorite spot, and she has her fair share of Lilly Pulitzer in the closet—she embodies the work hard/play hard ethos and admits that she sometimes spreads herself too thin with social obligations. Days are spent handling new business development for a boutique real-estate–executive search firm, a position that takes full advantage of her people skills, and she's been described as "Boston's commercial real estate industry matchmaker." Despite the demands of her career, she's involved with charities like Heading Home, Building Impact and Young Friends of the Public Garden. She doesn't suffer fools gladly and has no problem telling it like it is. A therapist to all her friends, she's like the girl next door with a business mogul's savvy, not to mention gorgeous hair.

Darrius Barnes, 26

Defender, New England Revolution

Every girl's crazy 'bout a sharp-dressed man, and when he's a star defender for the New England Revolution, he's even more irresistible. Born and raised in Raleigh, N.C., he has impeccable Southern manners and the smarts that got him into Duke University, where he majored in sociology. His senior year, he earned All-ACC honors, and he helped lead the Blue Devils to NCAA Tournament appearances in each of his four seasons, while serving as a key contributor to the teams that won the ACC championship his freshman and sophomore years. In 2008, he was named to the Duke/Nike Classic all-tournament team. In the 2009 MLS draft, the Revolution picked him up, and he was a candidate for rookie of the year. Despite a few injuries, his performance since has been stellar. He volunteers his time with the Big Brothers Big Sisters organization, is self-effacing and quick to laugh at himself. Naturally, one of his requirements in a lady is that she's tolerant of sports. Devoted to his family, he earns bonus points for a smile as dazzling as the diamond studs he's fond of wearing.

Jeanne Ficociello, 35

Veterinarian, South Shore VCA Animal Hospital

A native of Wilmington, she went to Phillips Academy Andover and then Harvard, where she was captain of the women's lacrosse team and made First-Team All-Ivy. After graduating cum laude in 2000, she got her advanced degree in veterinary medicine from the University of Pennsylvania, did her internship at a private practice in Los Angeles and her residency in small animal internal medicine, receiving her master's in 2011 and twice being named resident of the year. Obviously, one of her requirements is a love of dogs, as she dotes on hers, while also delivering superb care to other canines at a large veterinary hospital south of Boston. A stunning redhead with a quick wit, she sparkles even after an exhausting day of curing animals. Self-reliant and successful, she loves the outdoors, dotes on children, travels extensively and is equally comfortable hiking in the woods or sipping a glass of wine at a chic restaurant.

Brendan Shea, 31

Cofounder/project manager, Recover Green Roofs

For more than a decade, while getting his degree in environmental studies and political science and then post-graduation, he worked for an environmental engineering company. Then, in 2009, a piece on NPR about green roofs piqued his interest. With a friend, he took the leap and started Recover Green Roofs, making ends meet by waiting tables, catering and doing paid blind surveys while the company found its niche. Now his client list includes pharmaceutical giant Novartis, Phillips Andover Academy and SUNY, Newburgh. A Union Square resident who likes the neighborhood's diverse vibe, he considers the word "weird" a compliment and revels in the unconventional. His fantasy woman would be "someone who appreciates all the great benefits of living in a city, like art shows, basement music venues, riding bikes in traffic and international foods, but who also values and wants to spend time hiking, skiing, snowboarding or on a farm." Easygoing and naturally curious, he knows how to work hard but also enjoys sucking the marrow out of life.

Michael Cahill, 40+
Cofounder/owner, Reebok CrossFit Back Bay

After paying for college by building high-end homes on the North Shore, he signed on to work on the Big Dig before making a small fortune in real estate development, which he lost in 2009. CrossFit training helped him battle the depression that followed, and—fast-forward three years—he's now the cofounder/owner of one the world's largest Reebok CrossFit gyms. Needless to say, he's jacked. In his spare time, he volunteers helping build homes for Habitat for Humanity. With a million-dollar smile and a heart as big as the great outdoors, his ideal mate would be a woman with whom he feels comfortable being silent. When it comes to Irish step-dancing, he can bust a serious move. A jeans-and–T-shirt type, his perfect date is hiking down into Bryce Canyon National Park with a six-pack and watching the sun set, but his idea of romance is spending time in Aix-en-Provence. The perfect balance of sophistication and earthiness, his rags-to-riches-to-fulfillment story proves that you can't keep a good man down.

Christie Leigh Bellany, 37
Singer/songwriter, director of sales and marketing,
Big Night Entertainment Group

In addition to being an accomplished singer/songwriter, she's the president of CNC Music Productions and the director of sales and marketing at Big Night Entertainment Group, which operates nightclubs and restaurants like the Estate and Red Lantern. In January, she released a full-length album of 11 original songs, Deep Down Damned, which she recorded in Nashville with top-notch talent. Making it was a dream come true. A go, go, go type who can't sit still for 10 minutes, she loves to travel, most recently visiting Australia. She's an unusual mix of businesslike efficiency and charming spontaneity, juggling her two careers with aplomb and excelling at both. Her ideal date would be dinner at a nice restaurant, followed by canoodling on a beach blanket—she finds the simplest things in life to be the most romantic. Small gestures, like "flowers sent by a secret admirer," are the way to her heart. And we're guessing that after this issue comes out, her desk is going to be covered by them.

Jared Bachellor, 28

*Pastry chef, L'Espalier

A hipster with impressive hair and an edgy, urbane style that friends describe as "swaggy chic," he grew up on the North Shore and in New Hampshire. His mother was an avid baker and sold cakes out of their house, igniting his lifelong passion for pastry. After graduating from the prestigious Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y., he returned to Boston to work at the Ritz-Carlton. A three-year gig as assistant pastry chef at L'Espalier followed, during which he staged at many of the best restaurants in the world. He moved to Denmark to study under some of the globe's most innovative and renowned chefs, and, upon his return, he went back to L'Espalier as full pastry chef, a job that demands both a scientist's precision and an artist's panache. Although he admits to taking longer than a girl to get ready for an evening out, the end result is worth the wait. Just like one of his confections.

Bryan Eustis, 31

*Strategic operations specialist, Partners in Health

A Boston native, he serves as the strategic operations specialist for Partners in Health, an international NGO that provides quality health care to the poorest of the poor. He also founded and operates a public health consulting firm that specializes in emergency planning, response and program development. But this dedicated do-gooder knows how to cut loose. "I love to travel," he says, "so any date that involves getting on a plane sounds pretty ideal to me." A sports fan and accomplished runner, in 2010, he completed the Comrades Marathon in South Africa, a 54-mile race in the KwaZulu-Natal Province which runs through the aptly named "Valley of a Thousand Hills." A staunch believer that health is a human right, he has a lighter side and considers laughter essential to any relationship. He's a social chameleon who can mingle or chat with anyone, and he's been described as "gracefully honest" by one of his closest friends. That sounds charming to us.

Riki Shaffer, 32

*Software consultant, eVerge Group

Outdoorsy yet sophisticated, she grew up in the mountains of Maine and remains close to her family. A champion cross-country skier who qualified for the Junior Olympics all four years of high school, she moved to San Francisco on a whim after college and worked as a hotdog vendor. She now travels extensively for work as a software consultant, so during her weekends at home, she likes to enjoy and experience Boston. She volunteers for the Maine-based organization Healthy Hometowns, teaching people how to cross-country ski, and she's an avid sports fan who's still smarting about the Patriots. Sarcastic and quirky, she doesn't take herself too seriously. Her ideal date is a lazy Sunday brunch followed by a walk in the Arboretum and a glass of wine. Her perfect woman, meanwhile, is active and loves the outdoors, is strong both physically and mentally, family-oriented, kind and a tad nerdy. Her idea of romance? "Lying in bed, talking... or not talking."

Tony Perry, 26

Lead guitarist, TAB the Band

What girl can resist a soulful musician? And when he fronts a band like TAB the Band, all the better. A Duxbury native who studied at the School of Visual Arts in New York and at Boston University, he also runs a supplement company called Lucid Elixir. But it's being the lead guitarist for a band that's been featured in Rolling Stone and Spin that makes him swoon-worthy. He's opened for Jane's Addiction, Stone Temple Pilots, Modest Mouse and (his personal favorite) Black Rebel Motorcycle Club, while his songs have been featured on Entourage, Jersey Shore and the video game MLB 2K11. He takes pride in his open-mindedness and will try pretty much anything at least once. Unfailingly upbeat, he's an adrenaline junkie who enjoys skydiving, racing cars and riding motorcycles. A warning to any woman who wants to date him: Go with the flow or get out of the way. In his spare time, he likes to retreat to his family's farm in Vermont. A true free-spirit, he's a rock star who doesn't try too hard.

Erin Dunn, 30

*Hairstylist, James Joseph Salon

On first glance, her look may bring Katy Perry to mind, except this girl's got a whole lot more beauty and talent. An Andover native, she studied interior design and cosmetology, and is now one of the hottest hairstylists on Newbury Street. Oddly, this sexy lesbian claims to have more male clients than any of her colleagues at the James Joseph Salon. As big-hearted as she is beautiful, she's participated in such hair-related charities as HairRaising for Children's Hospital, the breast cancer Beauty Bash and Animal Umbrella. She manages the delicate balance of being both edgy and feminine in her personality and her style, and idles on high with the energy-level of a kid. She admits to occasionally being overly dramatic, but that's part of her charm. Her creativity, meanwhile, is obvious from the well-coiffed heads of her clients. Her drink of choice is a dirty martini, and she admires a fine tattoo. She continuously shops for home decor, and her idea of romance is an evening at home with the lucky girl she loves.

Stephen Martyak, 28

Owner, studioTYAK

A Southern gentleman with killer style, this gay bachelor has already accomplished a staggering amount, despite his tender age. Last fall, he launched studioTYAK (the "y" is silent), and he's already left his imprint on the city with restaurant projects like the Sinclair in Harvard Square, the new OSushi in Cambridge and the refreshed Da Vinci in the Back Bay. Born in Nashville and raised in North Carolina, he came to Boston to study architecture and fell in love with the city the moment the plane hit the tarmac at Logan. That's why, after earning a master's at the prestigious Savannah College of Art and Design, he came right back. A foodie who loves bourbon but can't abide gin, he's an avid snowboarder and a Pittsburgh Steelers fan. He has a savant's knowledge of musical theater and even wrote a play about his experiences working at the Pottery Barn on Newbury Street. His fresh vision and immense talent come in a handsome package topped off with an enviable head of hair and, if you listen to him closely, he has the slightest hint of a charming Southern accent.

KITTEN AROUND

IF YOU PLAN ON DRESSING up as Grumpy Cat for Halloween or love conversing in LOLCats speak (cheezburgers, anyone?), then your time is meow. Due to the success of other catchy events around the country, Boston's own Copy Cat Festival will allow some of the finest local felines the chance to show off their talents. Participants can enjoy such cat-centric categories as Internet videos, stories, limericks and even a slideshow of the city's very own kitties. An appearance by a local celebrity cat is also a pawsability. Come and see the pick of the litter on Feb. 17 at Somerville's Arts at the Armory.

Performing Arts

Edited by Hannah Sheinberg

'Tis the Seasons

Garden State Songsters In 1960s New Jersey, one band is just as slick as their hairstyles. Jersey Boys, the 2006 Tony award winner for best musical, looks past all the sheen and shine at the formation, fame and fallout of the Motown group, Frankie Valli and the Four Seasons. The musical looks back on members Tommy, Bob, Nick and Frankie as they ponder the quartet's hits, arguments and eventual induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Watch the band split hairs at the Citi Performing Arts Center's Emerson Colonial Theatre through March 3.

All's Fair in Love and War

Fedora Fling

Why do Valentine's Day and Casablanca have such a beautiful relationship? Here's looking at you, lovers. Known for stealing the hearts of women across the country since 1942, this classic romance film, set in WWII Morocco, follows American expatriate, Rick, after he runs into a former flame, Ilsa. Even though she previously deserted him in Paris at the start of the Nazi occupation, Rick must try to help his ex flee to America. It's true love, minus the chocolate and flowers. Watch as time goes by at the Brattle Theatre Feb. 13–14.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At West Newton.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Argo ★★★ It's 1979, and the Iranian embassy is under siege. Hostages are taken, but a handful of American office workers escape to their Canadian neighbor's basement. Enter Ben Affleck's CIA pro, figuring he can rescue the refugees by staging, of all things, a phony sci-fi movie shoot. Affleck's third directorial effort is extremely savvy entertainment, deftly blending showbiz satire with street-level suspense sequences. He revels in the grungy 1970s period detail, shooting on grainy film stock and letting the shag haircuts, countless cigarettes and awful mustaches do a lot of the talking. There's a tricky medley of tones going on here, like a lightweight Ocean's Eleven–style Hollywood caper butting up against a squalid Middle Eastern insurrection. Affleck remains a whiz with actors who are not Ben Affleck, his own performance the only weak link in a cast of great character actors. He also draws out the ending more than necessary and strays from the historical record in order to goose the audience along. No matter, as it's a hell of a ride. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Broken City ★★★ Mark Wahlberg's annual entry in the January release dump (last year's was the not-bad Contraband) is a cynical little neo-noir elevated by Russell Crowe's magnificently oily, hambone performance as the cuckolded mayor of New York City, who hires Marky Mark's alcoholic private eye to keep tabs on his wandering wife (Catherine Zeta-Jones) while he contends with a close election. Barry Pepper plays Crowe's possibly gay opponent, who knows a thing or two about a real-estate deal that just lined everybody's pockets. Scripted by first-timer Brian Tucker, Broken City is lowercase Bogart and wannabe Sidney Lumet, but not without its own, admittedly minor, pleasures. The movie has a jaded, boorish spirit embodied with lip-smacking ease by the two alpha male leads. There's even a pause to make time for a delightful tangent in which our hero falls off the wagon and insults art-film metrosexuals. Director Allen Hughes keeps the camera close and the edits crisp. No great shakes, but it's a solid B-movie programmer. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti Western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Gangster Squad ★ ½ Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's unintentionally hilarious new film is so slick and glossy, I almost slipped on it. Half of Hollywood's cool crowd has been laughably miscast to put on an anachronistic fashion show, caring not a whit for historical accuracy or any semblance of period detail. The 1940s jargon clangs with

Noir to the Neighborhood

the contemporary performances, and every set looks like a soundstage built yesterday. The Ellroy for Dummies plot concerns legendary racketeer Mickey Cohen, played here by Sean Penn beneath hideous prosthetic makeup and grotesque physical contortions. Josh Brolin's incorruptible cop, who wears one sour facial expression the whole movie, is recruited by Nick Nolte's wheezy police chief to head up a crew of vigilantes who leave their badges at home to take out Cohen's L.A. gambling operations by any means necessary. Ryan Gosling tackles the Doc Holliday role of a morally dubious, skirt-chasing lush by amusing himself in the ludicrous film in which he's trapped. His omnipresent smirk betrays a contempt for the material rivaled only by my own. (Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Jack Reacher ★★★ Working from One Shot, the ninth novel in Lee Child's inexhaustible but readable series, writer/director Christopher McQuarrie sticks a never droller Tom Cruise in the convoluted case of a Pittsburgh sniper who may or may not have been framed. As typical of Child's tales, the title character meticulously pores over the evidence with an almost Asperger-ish focus, openly insulting the local authorities while periodically mopping the floor with folks dumb enough to start bare-knuckle brawls. There's a pulpy zing to the dialogue, with some serious belly laughs arising from Reacher's blasé understatements and lightning-quick displays of superhuman strength. It could all easily seem like a silly exercise in movie star ego gratification if Cruise and McQuarrie didn't approach the material with just the right touch of humor. Jack Reacher is a deliberately lo-fi, old-school detective yarn that, at its best, feels like a really good episode of a '70s television show. That's fine with me. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Last Stand ★★★ By stockpiling action movie clichés to celebrate the disgraced Governator's first leading role in a decade, South Korean madman Kim Jee-woon's first American feature is just about everything you could possibly want from a movie starring Arnold Schwarzenegger and Johnny Knoxville. Ah-nuld still can't act his way out of a paper bag, yet, per usual, he exerts a bizarrely endearing screen charisma all the same. Here he tries on an Eastwood-ian role as an over-the-hill, small-town Arizona sheriff who doesn't cotton to the idea of a Mexican cartel running a race car–driving fugitive through his city. There are shades of a low-rent Rio Bravo as Schwarzenegger, whose character depends on incompetent deputies and a kooky jackass gun nut played by Knoxville, initially seems outmatched. It's all extremely silly and rather exceptionally directed, with pulpy mayhem executed at an outstanding level of craft, given that it's all basically nonsense. There's a dazzling car chase through a cornfield, and enough rounds expended to make the NRA blush. What else were you expecting? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but, if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Parker ★ ½ At first glance, Jason Statham seems like perfect casting for pulp maestro Donald E. Westlake's coldly calculating antihero, previously played by Lee Marvin in Point Blank, Robert Duvall in The Outfit and Mel Gibson in Payback. But director Taylor Hackford does both his star and the character a terrible disservice, softening them both for a flabby adaptation of Flashfire, one of the 20-something heist novels Westlake wrote under the pseudonym Richard Stark. Hackford seems to think the audience will only root for Parker (Statham) if he's a nice guy, so he commits random acts of kindness during the usual double crosses and cold-blooded killings. The pacing is flaccid and the videography terrible—Parker looks like a soap opera. Parker is weirdly neutered, spending too much time narrating about his code of ethics. Jennifer Lopez offers a welcome bit of sass in a disposable eye-candy role that doesn't have much to do with the story. What else is there to say about a movie in which J.Lo gives the best performance? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Promised Land ★★ Matt Damon is such an effortlessly compelling, low-key screen presence, I'd follow him anywhere. That includes this picture, despite Promised Land being a disappointing, painfully earnest, social issues melodrama. In a tale penned by the star and fellow Boston native John Krasinski, Damon and the invaluable Frances McDormand play representatives of a multinational natural gas conglomerate who arrive in a deliberately unnamed farm town attempting to lease the land for fracking purposes. Krasinski is the backwards-baseball-cap-and-cargo-shorts–wearing environmentalist who teams up with Hal Holbrook's community leader for a lot of long-winded lectures. Director Gus Van Sant does his best to shade these proceedings with an admirable appreciation for everyday life, and it's a testament to his casual mastery that the movie ever feels like anything more than a glorified PowerPoint presentation. Our loyalties are instantly lopsided, as Damon is a born movie star while John Krasinski is a tall geeky guy from television. I spent the entire time rooting for the bad guy. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Silver Linings Playbook ★★ Wouldn't life be great if mental illness was as adorable as it is in the movies? Selling out his great talent to the (500) Days of Juno School of Middlebrow Quirk, writer/director David O. Russell has adapted Matthew Quick's 2008 novel Silver Linings Playbook into a crassly calculated, feel-good romantic comedy that's presumably destined for all sorts of box office success and Oscar nominations. I can see why. It's a goofy crowd-pleaser with some pretty good performances and a carefully calibrated illusion of "edginess." It's also offensive. Bradley Cooper stars as a bipolar manic depressive just out of an institution and remanded to his parents' care by the court. Enter Jennifer Lawrence as a depressive pixie dream girl still reeling from the death of her police officer husband. Grief has turned her into a bit of a nymphomaniac because all serious problems in this movie must manifest themselves as cheap punch lines. Who knew that a silly dance contest could magically cure serious psychological problems? This is just insulting. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (In the suburbs.)

This Is 40 ★★ Clearly aspiring to be the John Cassavetes of penis jokes, writer/director Judd Apatow turns inward for This Is 40, a semi-autobiographical sprawl with some honest moments strewn about the shapeless bickering. Paul Rudd and Leslie Mann reprise their roles as the devoted but dissatisfied married couple who stole Apatow's 2007 surprise smash Knocked Up. It's probably not the savviest move at this moment in the zeitgeist to try and elicit sympathy for wealthy folks living beyond their means. (Let's just say that Apatow's idea of financial distress is a good deal comfier than my own experience.) The meandering first hour and a half of this absurdly overlong movie successfully depicts the day-to-day grind of family life, unflinchingly chronicling all the temper tantrums, petty slights and lack of privacy that come with any prolonged cohabitation. The rougher parts are salvaged only by a sublime turn from Albert Brooks. Apatow's honesty is commendable, but after 134 minutes you'll wish he'd kept some things to himself. (In the suburbs.)

Park Life

Bargaining Chips

A two-timing crook, played by Jason Statham, aims to get revenge on his former gang in Parker.

Warm Bodies ★★ ½ Working from a popular novel by Isaac Marion, writer/director Jonathan Levine takes an unexpectedly clever spin around some well-trod terrain. Our hero, R (Nicholas Hoult, who'll make you feel old when you realize he's the kid from About a Boy), is an undead hipster who falls head over heels with Teresa Palmer's feisty heroine, Julie, sometime after the end of civilization. It's an awkward courtship, to say the least. But a strange thing happens as he hangs out with her. R stops rotting and starts remembering things. Apparently, love does conquer all, even zombiehood. Marion's book was a riff on Romeo and Juliet (in case the main characters' names didn't tip you off), but it's easy to interpret Levine's adaptation as a devastatingly funny send-up of the Twilight phenomenon. I was at a Barnes & Noble recently and saw an entire section devoted to "teen paranormal romance." Warm Bodies is at its funniest when the film is digging into the messy details of just how such romances might work. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong ripoff. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (In the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Let There Be Light

Living up to their name, the livetronica duo Big Gigantic have made an impact on the electronic and hip-hop worlds since the release of their first album, Fire It Up, in 2009. Following their debut, the Boulder, Colo., group has experimented with jazz melodies over mind-bending beats to keep the hype building, culminating in Nocturnal, which released last year. As Dominic Lalli flows between keys, sax and laptop, Jeremy Salken ups the energy on drums. See Big Gigantic push boundaries with their live band/DJ blend at the House of Blues on Feb. 15.

Paint the Town Red

Ken Beck has been around the block—in fact, it's his inspiration. The Boston artist, who earned his MFA from the School of the Museum of Fine Arts, is known for his paintings of everyday objects. From oil paintings of weatherworn rocks with distinct faces to Warhol-esque takes on street fixtures, Beck's work appears with other local multimedia pieces in Art in Boston. The exhibit from collector and curator Sinclair Hitchings is on display at the Chandler Gallery at Maude Morgan Arts through March 1.

Books & Poetry

Plath Finder

American Idol

Fifty years after the publication of Sylvia Plath's seminal semi-autobiography, The Bell Jar, the poet/author has been lionized as a feminist icon. American Isis: The Life and Art of Sylvia Plath by Carl Rollyson sheds new light on the tortured artist and is the first biography to examine the recently released letters between Plath and her estranged husband, poet Ted Hughes. Rollyson resurrects Plath's tumultuous life and turbulent relationship while drawing parallels to Isis, the Egyptian goddess associated with both motherhood and death. Hear Rollyson explore Plath's work and legacy at the Harvard Book Store on Feb. 15. Christina Giannopoulos

BONUS POINTS AND JEFF DUNHAM TICKETS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER DRESSED AS KERMIT THE FROG AT THE ISHARA INTERNATIONAL PUPPET FESTIVAL IN MUMBAI, INDIA, HELD FEB. 14–16.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you went. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

After going to Burgundy, France, Charles and Eileen Glovsky were dismayed to only encounter shades of maroon, vermilion, ruby and scarlet.

Rachel Sanker and Rebecca Joyce didn't want to be confined to railings at the Grand Canyon, Ariz., so they posed on this dangerous rock instead.

Justin Mull brought Ming Tsai to Florence, Italy, to persuade him to add an Italian eatery to his Asian restaurants, Blue Ginger and Blue Dragon. They're considering the name Blue Meatball.

Woody Johnson, owner of the New York Jets, looks into gymnastics leotards for his players to wear during football practice, which supposedly allows for more movement and gold medals.

Let the Games Begin

On Saturday, Feb. 2, the third annual Burrito Bowl was hosted at Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake. This culinary competition brings together chefs such as Estelle's Eric Gburski, Tremont 647's Andy Husbands, Taranta's Jose Duarte and many more, to determine whose burrito creation reigns supreme. In honor of the following day's Super Bowl XLVII, the chefs created a signature burrito reflecting the city of their favorite NFL team.

Eric Kinniburgh, prep cook; Jason Hutchinson, executive chef; and Paul Booras, VP of operations; all at Boloco and winners of Burrito Bowl III

Christina Castagnozzi, associate at PricewaterhouseCoopers; Jayne Busa, case manager at Arbour Counseling Services; and Nicole Jensen, student advocate at School on Wheels

Tony Castagnozzi, co-owner of the Rattlesnake, and Brian Poe, chef/co-owner of Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake and Tip Tap Room

Feast in the City

On Sunday, Jan. 20, dozens of restaurants came out to support the Joslin Diabetes Center's High Hopes Fund as part of the 2013 CityFeast. Participating guests, including Mayor Thomas M. Menino, wined and dined over five courses at various local favorites in the North End, South End and Seaport neighborhoods. Since its founding in 2005 by Carla Agrippino-Gomes, proprietor of the North End's Antico Forno and Terramia, CityFeast has raised more than $200,000 for the High Hopes Fund

Carla Gomes, proprietor of Antico Forno and Terramia, and John Brooks, president/CEO of Joslin Diabetes Center

Shannon Kelley Felton, publicist at ReganCommunications, and Jessica Orndorff, development officer at Joslin Diabetes Center

Bowl for Charity

On Monday, Jan. 28, The Improper Bostonian was pleased to be a sponsor of the 10th annual Flutie Bowl hosted by Doug Flutie. The event was held at Kings, Legacy Place in Dedham.

Former Patriots player Kevin Faulk; Doug Flutie, cofounder of the Doug Flutie, Jr. Foundation for Austism; and Patriots wide receiver Julian Edelman

Nicole Guglielmucci, director of marketing & events; Lisa Borges, executive director, both for the Doug Flutie, Jr. Foundation for Autism; and Allyce Najimy, executive director of the Foundation to be Named Later

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post- game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Boston's finest restaurants and clubs

SUNSET GRILL & TAP [130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331] SUNSET CANTINA [916 Commonwealth Ave., Boston, 617-731-8646] Don't just come for Boston's Best Beer Selection featuring 112 taps and 300 microbrews. Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 Dartmouth Street, Boston, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SORORITY TIES

She Ain't Heavy

As a rule, I've found that most women don't welcome being referred to as "big" unless it's immediately followed by "sister," in which case it's high praise. That's why the crème de la crème showed up when the Big Sister Association held its annual awards reception. Held at Legends (inside the Garden), the evening attracted the likes of honorees Tricia Luong, Ana Leon, Lisa Ewing and Caroline Kohler, Tanzanian glamazon Namasha Schelling, scruffy McHottie Tim Leahy and the dashing David Waters of Community Servings, effortless fashion plate Marlie Sarr, the delightful Elly Van Faasen and her colleague in loveliness, Alisha Collins, the aptly named Dr. Wing Delatorre, advertising mogul Kimberly Angelovich, 2012's "Miss New England Perfect" Cyndal Todd, and wealth management bigwig Kathy Wallace, to name a mere smattering.

Overheard by the cheese platter: One man said to his friend, "I hear Atlantis is a good place to take kids," to which his friend responded, "The gay cruise line? I thought it was all shirtless guys grinding on the deck." An awkward pause ensued, followed by the first man saying, "I meant the resort in the Bahamas."

However, the evening's choicest remark came from the woman who said, "It's National Mentoring Month? The only thing I'm qualified to mentor a young girl about is how to judge people based on their shoes."

Turnaround Is Fair Play

Speaking of sisters, they may be doin' it for themselves, but they're also doin' good things for each other. Dress for Success, which helps disadvantaged women transition to self-sufficiency, held its annual luncheon at the Copley Plaza, and just about every high-octane woman within a hundred-mile radius, as well as a few men, were there.

Unmistakable amid the capacity crowd: gracefully aging pretty boy Jeff Bellows and his cochair, Denise Leyhe, on-TV-but-she-plays-one-in-real-life Dr. Mallika Marshall and her mother, glass-ceiling smasher and the first woman ever to moderate a presidential debate, Carole Simpson, power pair Jacqui and Wayne Budd, smokin' hot new mom Danielle Cataldo, fashion designer Denise Hajjar, force of nature Dusty Rhodes, hale and hearty investment banker Tommy Loucas, board member Mitch Reisenberger, oversized radio personalities Sue Brady Hartigan and Lauren Beckham Falcone, the shockingly beautiful Sara Underwood, state treasurer Steve Grossman, Senate President Therese Murray, eye-poppingly gorgeous emcee Shayna Seymour, and one woman who had to leave early because she was going to her kid's school to read aloud the children's classic Walter the Farting Dog.

The afternoon's award, a Cinderella-like glass slipper, was presented to honoree Mary Lou Andre, and the wine kept flowing to loosen up the bidding in the live auction. Overheard at lunch:

"I love your necklace."

"Thanks. It's my 12-year-old daughter's. I'm hoping I can sneak it back into her jewelry box before my neck turns green."

The Gaffe That Keeps on Giving

It might've been the dead of winter, but a veritable rainbow appeared at Get Konnected's first gathering of the year.

The city's only free networking event for multicultural professionals, the organization's Chinese New Year shindig was held at Forum, and the crowd drew from every imaginable ethnic, cultural, sexual, age and income bracket. Seen bubbling in this melting pot: WGBH head honcha Marita Rivero, her comrade in arms, World Channel GM Liz Cheng, bridge-builder Colette Philips, the unsinkable Doris Yaffe, government analyst Shirley Huang, agent provocateur Olivia Ives-Flores, and one woman who gave a Chinese friend the traditional New Year's greeting, "Gong hei fat choi."

"Did she pronounce that correctly?" asked another friend.

"I have no idea. I speak Mandarin, and she's speaking Cantonese."

However, both the evening's funniest remark and proof of its effectiveness came when the host mentioned that the group's new sponsor, WGBH, had job openings for which they were welcoming applicants.

"It's not binders of women, but at least a folder's worth of job opportunities." ***

Götterdämmerung Now

After centuries of boring calculus, theoretical physicists have finally warranted their research grants. Last week, they delivered a working timetable for the end of the universe. Turns out, Armageddon/Ragnarok/the Zombie Apocalypse doesn't involve Jesus/Loki/Joan Rivers' face. Rather, it's all about the mass value of the diminutive Higgs Boson particle. Whipping this number into some sort of hideous, gonzo death equation, physicists now predict that, in a few tens of billions of years, there'll be a little burp of alternate universe, probably emanating from Arizona. This will then avalanche outwards at light speed, gobbling everything in its wake like a party-crasher by the ceviche tray.

Adam DeTour

Which proves that the totality of existence, then, is inherently unstable (see "Drink of the Moment," page 14). The universe not only wants to change, it's actually defined by transience. Exactly like women's fashions. Last year's peplum becomes this year's peekaboo piece, just like our galaxy will soon be nothing but a splat of vacuum. So when you next see a Vogue cover girl flouncing down a runway wearing what looks like a leather popcorn bucket, you're actually witnessing an ontological commentary, a reverent tribute to the nature of being. A glimpse into the mind of God.

Ha ha ha. That's stupid. Fashion's actually all about looking fabulous, as shown by Lydia Santangelo's spring fashion feature in this issue. We shot it in Florida, and partly underwater. It's spectacular.

Pumped Up

WALKING A MILE IN SOMEONE else's shoes may prove difficult if they happen to be designed by 23-year-old Thom Solo. The Newton native and School of the Museum of Fine Arts graduate creates six- to eight-inch platform stilettos that mix the eccentricity of Alexander McQueen with the elevation of circus stilts. "High heels are meant to be high!" says Solo. "Any shoe that's under six [inches] is merely a flat with a raise."

Beginning with a love of jelly sandals in the '90s, Solo's footwear appreciation has reached new heights. For women, the sky is no longer the limit—it's the ability to balance. "Luckily, none of my clients have taken a spill, but I've had the occasional female friend try on a pair after a drink or two, and it doesn't end well," says Solo.

Later this spring, Solo, whose pedestal-like pumps have been worn by Daphne Guinness, Carly Rae Jepsen and Neon Hitch, will launch a more twisted collection, Giger. Inspired by Swiss surreal artist H.R. Giger (the Martian maker behind the Alien films) and the power of female superheroes, the line includes femme-fatale options such as Mary Jane heels and thigh-high boots. "The collection ultimately is built around the story of a woman who has escaped from the confines of society," says Solo. "The shoes are an extension of her armor, which have many different forms." And, if you're really out fighting bad guys, the stiletto can also double as a weapon.

Cocoa Buffs

It's like Swiss Miss took a holiday in Mexico. While the prefab powder is actually a guilty pleasure among the Mei Mei food truck's staffers, their milky, decadent interpretation is built on real cocoa and whimsical touches. The bulk of the sweetness comes from house-made malted cranberry and barley syrups—a nod to the crew's love of good beer—and heat arrives with satiny, stretchy marshmallows laced with local cayenne. The delicate white "snow" on top? Powdered salted butter, a cheffy trick inspired by the butter co-owner Irene Mei has been stirring into her own mugs of hot chocolate for years.

SWEET SPOTS

DESPITE THE NAME, FIXX candy bars aren't just for sugar junkies. Still, the label is apt, as once sampled, the bars do leave an impression. As the former executive pastry chef of Finale, Nicole Coady's candies aren't simply flecked with a few "gourmet" ingredients. They're richly sweet, indulgently thick and boast balanced combinations of tastes, such as peanut nougat with maple caramel and bacon coated in first-rate chocolate. They're only available wholesale right now, but a website is in the works, and Coady hopes to open a retail shop.

Out in Needham, expect the Farmhouse to open its doors by March 1. The husband-and-wife team of Dora Tavel–Sanchez Luz and Gabriel Sanchez Luz formerly ran a catering company, and Sanchez Luz has experience at restaurants like Bondir, Aka Bistro and 80 Thoreau. Thanks to more than $10,000 raised via Kickstarter, they've put the final touches on the design with lots of reclaimed wood. And thanks to a full liquor license, they'll be offering a plethora of local beers, small-batch liquors and esoteric wines.

"We want people to feel like we're all in this together," says Tavel–Sanchez Luz, who describes the Farmhouse's layout—with an open kitchen and a 16-seat "farmers' community table"—as warm and welcoming. "We don't want to be super-fancy or super-casual," she adds.

MEXICAN MAKEOVER: Allston's Big City has morphed into Patron's Mexican Kitchen and Watering Hole. Proprietor Marc Kadish added fireplaces, booths and dozens of tequilas. Still available: pool tables, foosball and the extensive beer selection. The new menu ranges from house-smoked chicken with mole sauce to burgers steamed in Mexican beer, and the newly enlarged bar serves up $4 margaritas as well as jalapeño maitre d' buttered popcorn.

TWO FOR THE ROAD

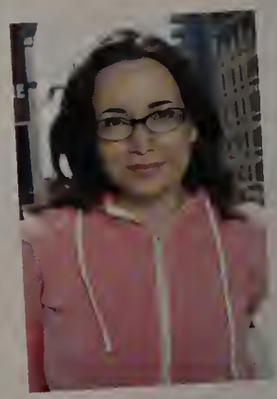
Everything came together for chef/co-owner Louis DiBicarri after acquiring the space for Tavern Road, the new restaurant he opened with his brother Michael. "This is a passion project," he says. "And you can't see that passion that far down the road. It isn't until you get to Fort Point, and you get that feeling in your gut that this neighborhood means something to you."

Named for the street where their uncle Adio, a Boston sculptor, had a studio, Tavern Road celebrates the arts community that once ruled the neighborhood. The DiBicarris commissioned local artist collective Project Super Friends to produce a 30-foot mural in the main dining room as an homage to their uncle. Sandwiched on both sides by a large open kitchen and the bar area, the mural is accented by a dropped-ceiling centerpiece plastered in the same material Adio used in his works.

To accommodate the lunch crowd in the area, the DiBicarris have a connected room called Street Foods. The carry-out spot offers prepackaged meals, including a cold-cut sandwich made from the previous day's porchetta—a dish with which Louis has had a long-standing love affair. "It's the perfect way to showcase the pig all in one composition," he says. A crisp layer of belly meat stuffed with sausage and tenderloin, the porchetta is sliced and served with raw shaved fennel and olive oil–roasted almonds, and is available on the dine-in menu.

Though this iteration of swine is a chef favorite, there's also charcuterie and a rotating protein, dubbed "today's animal," which comes from a local farm and is prepared four ways. Come spring, goat will make its way to the plate. Tavern Road's sides are vegetarian, and there's a separate menu of plant-based selections that also includes gluten-free choices. Diners are encouraged to order multiple options—think polenta with chestnuts and sage and broccoli rabe, lightly caramelized and tossed with golden raisins, pine nuts and vanilla seasoning—to share family style.



"As an artist you want your food to rise up to the same level as the other art," says Louis, who staffed his kitchen with alums from Persephone, Lumière, Sel de la Terre, Menton and more. "We all work with our hands, everything's done from scratch, and the plates are canvases."

Q&A

BELLE OF THE BOWLING BALL

Film and TV star, comedian and former Allston resident Janeane Garofalo performs stand-up at the Wilbur Theatre on March 2.

What's your favorite type of character to play?

You know, it's case by case. I actually prefer dramatic work—I find it more interesting in a lot of ways. When it comes to television and mainstream film, I feel like they tend to handle drama a little more gracefully. Mainstream comedy can be not my cup of tea. It can be rather sophomoric, and also, gender-wise, the females are not given much, if anything, to do. And I'm older, so there's almost nothing for me to do until I'm Betty White's age, and then perhaps they'll bring me in to say things that no older woman would say. That just isn't my thing. I'm not saying all mainstream movies are bad. But for the most part, the parts are not written particularly interestingly for anything other than the male leads. Now, in drama that's not always the case. There tends to be more for everyone to do. There are bad dramas, too, no doubt, but the half-hour sitcom can be a real drag. I'm talking about ABC, NBC and CBS. Sometimes shows succeed on those networks despite the networks' best efforts. But there's really good things happening outside of the big three, or the former big three, networks. And that interests me.

How was David Letterman a big inspiration for you?

When I was in high school, the show came on. And I loved it. The show furthered my interest in the world of comedy. When I was a kid, I loved listening to stand-up comedy albums. That world interested me, but I didn't quite know in what way. Then Letterman came on, and I thought, 'I want to write for Letterman.' Even though I don't know how I'd accomplish that; I didn't know what it even entailed. I just thought, 'I want to live in New York—I grew up in New Jersey, so it's not that big a leap to go to New York—and maybe I'll start in the page program at NBC and work my way up.' Then my parents said, 'No, you're going to college, and then hopefully you'll let go of this idea.' So I went to college, and I decided, 'I'm just going to start doing stand-up then, while I'm at school, and see how it goes.' Even though I was bombing all the time, I still loved doing it.

Did you get to keep the bowling ball from Mystery Men?

I did. I'm looking at it right now. It's a glass one that the propmaster gave me. It's not the one that was used 'cause it's very heavy, and actually my fingers don't really fit in the holes. But it's now in the corner of my living room, sitting on a dog toy tire.

TORCH OF HERACLITUS
Catalyst, 300 Technology Square, Cambridge (617-576-3000) catalystrestaurant.com

NAME: Torch of Heraclitus

PRICE: $11

INVENTOR: Catalyst's beverage manager Jason Kilgore

INGREDIENTS: Balcones Brimstone, Pimm's No. 1, Suze, Lillet Rose, simple syrup, bergamot juice, ginger beer.

CLASSICAL ALLUSION: Heraclitus was an ancient Greek philosopher famed for his aphorism, "You cannot step twice into the same stream." Meaning that the nature of the universe is inconstant. He considered fire to be the most powerful force behind change and the basis of the other elements, and hence of all things.

ACTUALLY...: "It's also a lyric from a Polish death metal band, Behemoth," says Kilgore, who himself plays guitar for a Boston death metal band called Smite the Righteous.

STATING THE OBVIOUS: "Our bartenders have a good sense of humor."

WHERE THERE'S SMOKE: "The name is because of the smokiness." The drink is an attempt to play off the discontinued Pimm's No. 2, a Scotch-based liqueur (there used to be six Pimm's recipes in distribution, but nowadays we're only familiar with No. 1, rooted in gin). To recreate the taste, Kilgore used Balcones Brimstone, a whiskey made with smoked scrub oak. "It's smoky in terms of a cold smoker, like a smoked piece of meat."

FLAVOR: First on the nose is the sweet fizz of the ginger beer, followed by a bright citrus taste from the Pimm's, Lillet and Suze. The smoke wells up in the background, ending each sip in a minor key. Which is appropriate for a drink named after "the weeping philosopher."

PAIR IT WITH: "The beet salad has citrus segments and feta, giving it that sweetness you need. Or the chicken liver mousse, with its smoky notes."

Impersonals LAYER TAKE

TO WEATHER-IGNORANT BOSTONIANS: I understand that it's been a cold winter, and that nice days that get up to 50 degrees are a welcome break, but going outside in shorts or a T-shirt is still not acceptable. I can understand that a jog along the Charles may call for less clothing, but for a walk to the market it's still not OK to be wearing flip-flops. Side note: Nobody wants to see your winter bodies in these clothes just yet.

Still wearing three layers

To all drivers who wanted to take my parking spot after Nemo: It took me two hours to shovel out on my street after the storm. Three cars tried to take the spot from me... as I was shoveling. I literally made a spot for myself in a snowbank, and when I almost finished, three different people drove up to me and asked if I could move. What do you think? That I shoveled it out for you guys? I'm standing here with my shovel in hand, what do you think I'm doing?

Bitter in the blizzard

To the college kid that knocked down an elaborate snowman on Boston Common: You're a fun-sucking, low-life meathead of a human being. I can't think of a more heartless thing to do than to run chest first into a kid's snowman, ruthlessly toppling it over with your body weight and making a crass spectacle of yourself. Do humanity a favor and stay inside after the next nor'easter.

Snow day enthusiast

To the young women bar-hopping on Boylston: Your outfits would still be inappropriate if the weather were above-freezing temperatures. I don't appreciate staring at bare bottoms while waiting to get my ID scanned. But who am I to tell you to put actual clothes on?

Happily in pants

To the group of students that loudly sang Alicia Keys at the table next to me in Noodle Street: I prefer to eat my pad Thai without hearing you attempt to sing "This Girl Is on Fire." You're not only embarrassing yourself, you're embarrassing Alicia Keys. And a crowded restaurant is not the appropriate place to recreate Pitch Perfect. Worst of all, you got the songs stuck in my head, too.

Wine

Cherry Picking

Once upon a time, the world was filled with quirky wines that represented the uniqueness of a particular place. While much of that diversity has been steamrolled, there are still pockets of individualism, particularly in southern Europe. Ripasso is one such style, specific to the Veneto in northeastern Italy. It's a luscious, dark-hued red made in the Valpolicella zone by steeping the leftover skins of amarone or recioto grapes in superior-level juice prior to fermentation, producing a wine rich in aroma, body and flavor.

ZENATO VALPOLICELLA SUPERIORE RIPASSA, 2009

($30, THE WINE & CHEESE CASK)

This is a robust wine with smoke, tobacco and black cherry aromas and an intensely spicy cherry flavor. Beautifully balanced, there's a lingering almond and coffee note on the finish that's powerful and irresistible. Great on its own, this would pair superbly with a hearty lamb stew.

TENUTA SANT'ANTONIO MONTI GARBI VALPOLICELLA SUPERIORE RIPASSO, 2010

(COMING SOON)

Soft, charming and quaffable, the Monti Garbi is bursting with cherry flavors. Floral, somewhat herbal and peppery, it's ripasso on a lighter, more approachable, scale. This fresher style is ideal for milder seafood or chicken dishes.

CESARI MARA VALPOLICELLA RIPASSO SUPERIORE, 2010

($25, FRESH POND LIQUORS)

This is a lovely wine with an enticing aroma of cherry, wood and pipe tobacco. Silky smooth, it's almost liqueur-like, with almond bark and bittersweet chocolate flavors, along with raisiny notes and a hint of earthy spice. It'd be a wonderful accompaniment to a veal chop with mushrooms.

TOMMASI VALPOLICELLA RIPASSO SUPERIORE, 2010

($25, CAMBRIDGE WINE & SPIRITS)

A more rustic style, the Tomassi has an intriguing cheese rind, dried cherry and herbaceous aroma, with baked red fruit flavors and a hint of sweetness. Lively, complex and peppery, this full-bodied ripasso would partner well with grilled, spice-rubbed swordfish.

Leftover Love

Rosewater Recipe

6 cups chemical-free rose petals
4 cups water

1. Add petals to water and boil for 15 minutes.
2. Let cool, then strain.
3. Divide water between spritzer bottles.
4. Shake before using.

This side of V-Day means those beautiful roses from your beau are losing their petals, and that chocolate is seeping through your skin. But with a little craft, you can you can turn your sweetheart's token of floral affection into rosewater to treat those sugar-induced blemishes.

Natural and restorative, rosewater is a winter-skin cure-all. According to Ludamila Slavin, owner of Boston Holistic Healing Center, the solution has antibacterial qualities that make it a great substitute for toner and more. Spray it on to set makeup in the morning or to refresh skin midday. It's also known to help during times of trauma, notes Slavin, and aid women during menopause and PMS (just rub a little on your temples to help with migraines).

Add a few drops of witch hazel extract to transform the rosewater into an astringent, or if your love life's suffering from a post–Valentine's Day slump, add a little rose oil and spray on sheets, or even yourself, to stir up those romantic feelings.

Good Jeans

Tone:

Jewel tones are big this year, as are muted corals and mints. Coming up hot, however, are two-toned jeans—business in the front and party in the back (or vice versa, depending on your mood).

Print:

Floral is fine, but camo is coming back. This classic print, once reserved for badass babes, is taking over this spring, feminized by green and gray tones.

Effect:

Distressed denim has—thankfully—evolved since the '90s grunge look. On trend today are lightly roughed-up jeans, perfectly breezy for the warming-up months.

Fit:

It may be called the boyfriend cut, but we all know it's the girls that keep this look alive. This year's boyfriend jeans debut in a slimmer silhouette to avoid that slouchy look. But don't neglect the skinny jean, which always lends wearers a slender, elongated leg.

GLAZE OF GLORY

Union Square Donuts just opened its doors, but was forced to close twice on its first day. After just 90 minutes, the shop sold more than 200 donuts. A couple hours, and another couple hundred fritters later, there was nothing left but a dusting of powdered sugar. Co-owner Josh Danoff (creator of summer treat Ocean Ave. Pops) and his crew are cranking out their whimsically flavored sweets as fast as they can. Yet when each cake is handrolled, shaped and glazed, that can take some time.

With chocolate-chipotle, maple-bacon and ginger-orange cream filled varieties, these donuts are worth the wait. (Just don't dawdle too long.)

HEARTS AND MINES

Vignettes about a dying coal community in the sequel to Baker Towers

THE LANDSCAPE OF THESE stories is the collapsed coal-mining town of Bakerton, Pa., and the subsequent, sorrowful trails of its decline among its close-knit Polish families. Characters appear in interconnected stories, spinning to reveal various sides at different moments in their lives, and Jennifer Haigh richly conveys their curled-up feelings and secrets.

In one story, Joyce is a school principal's wife bound to propriety. Her brother Sandy bursts away into a life of Vegas and reckless rootlessness, and Joyce quietly sends him money 'til he comes home, in a coffin, accompanied by the sexy Vera (whom we come to know in another story). Suicide severs family ties in this disturbing tale.

News From Heaven
By Jennifer Haigh

Haigh lives in the Boston area.

In "Broken Star," Peg, a cucumber-pickling, old-fashioned farmer's wife, invites young Melanie to stay. The two get along swimmingly. But the story darkens with hidden blood connections and lies, and Peg drives Melanie to seek an abortion, with catastrophic results.

Also moving, another beautifully sad tale about Joyce, who never rode a bike, considering the disposition of her now-dead husband's bicycle. She almost lets a mooching caretaker have it, but in a subtle twist of grief, decides to keep the memento. ×××

"She buttoned her coat and headed out into the cold. A stiff wind had kicked up. Walking home, she felt warmed from inside, hot with pleasure and embarrassment. Bakerton was a small town. Mindful of appearances, she always kept a certain distance from her pupils. Any passing pedestrian might have seen her through the glass door, alone in the shop with Alan Spangler, giggling like schoolgirls as he placed the hat on her head."

ON POINT

Roughing it Rockefeller-style in Saranac Lake, N.Y.

CABIN IN THE WOODS A taste of Gilded Age camping

YOU COULD DRIVE THE nearly six hours to the Point, a swank resort in Saranac Lake, N.Y. But you might as well fly. Cape Air offers an easy hour-and-a-half flight from Logan to Adirondack Regional Airport, with bird's eye views included.

A driver from the Point will greet you, and 20 minutes later you'll be sipping Pommery Champagne in the lodge's foyer. It's an elegant prelude of what's to come, particularly in winter when soft powder blankets the land in a cozy white hush providing the perfect backdrop for outdoor adventures, crackling fires and lush dinners eaten with a view of the woods.

Gilded Age barons like the Vanderbilts, Astors and Guggenheims liked to construct log estates along the lakes of upper New York state to serve as bucolic respites from the smog and confines of urban life. William Avery Rockefeller built the Point a century ago on 75 secluded acres to serve as his family's "Great Camp." Today, it's a place to celebrate a marriage, a big anniversary or to simply rough it, Rockefeller-style.

Spread among the compound's original four log cabins are 11 guestrooms, each with water views and rustic, elegant furnishings—chunky stone fireplaces, oversized armchairs, dark-wood walls adorned with 19th-century oil paintings and heavy fabrics smoothed over handmade beds. All meals and beverages are included, including wine and spirits from four open bars. The point staff seems to anticipate every whim, whether it's laundering wet ski socks or simply showing up with another cold martini.

In the tradition of the Great Camps, everyone at the Point dines together, although arrangements can be made for private in-room breakfasts, dinners and picnic lunches elsewhere on the property. Most guests order a pot of coffee or tea to savor in their room before joining the group for breakfast in the Main Lodge, which also houses the kitchen, Great Hall and four guestrooms. Beyond breakfast, diners can order whatever they wish, whether it's a croissant and espresso or a stack of raspberry pancakes, scrambled eggs and bacon. After thumbing through the newspaper, working on a puzzle or going for a walk, it's time for lunch, which is always a barbecue on Saturdays. But we're not talking weenies and burgers. This spread could be from a Fellini movie—a chef and multiple staff manning a fire-lit outdoor grill (weather permitting) holding a bevy of ceramic pots heaped with seasonal fare, like chunky beef chili, fried chicken, maple Brussels sprouts, truffle mac 'n' cheese and Cajun-spiced shrimp. Nearby, cutting boards are loaded with juicy cuts of steak, pork tenderloin, grilled chicken breasts and sizzling sausages like wild boar and spicy pork. There are grilled vegetables, salads and baskets of focaccia or crisp onion rings. Just as you're contemplating a nap, the staff comes marching up the hill bearing warm bread pudding, peanut butter cheesecake and chocolate-raspberry meringue tort.

Clearly, exercise is a needed antidote to executive chef Mark Levy's cooking. Since Saranac Lake is considered the coldest spot in the mainland U.S., it'll likely be frozen solid and groomed for an afternoon game of curling. While heaving leaden stones across ice may not be everyone's idea of a good time, there's nothing like a glass of Scotch or rum-spiked cider to jack up the fun factor. If you want to snowshoe, the Point's warming hut has multiple sizes of men's and women's boots for snowshoes or cross-country skis. Try them around Fish Creek Pond, a short drive from the resort. Halfway around the snowy track, just when you're ready to call it a day, you'll spy a picnic basket set on a wooden table filled with hot spiced cider and creamy hot chocolate. Revived, you either forge on or head home to relax before dinner.

When a card is slipped under your door noting where to meet for cocktails, it's hard not to feel you're a guest at a grand house party. The requested dress for dinner is coat and tie for men, except Saturday and Wednesday, which, in the spirit of Great Camp dining, are black tie. After cocktails, everyone heads to the Great Hall for dinner, a multicourse extravaganza. Various wines accompany chef Levy's French-style plates, which feature local produce, fish and game, along with treats like caviar and foie gras. Should some intrepid soul suggest a post-prandial visit to the bonfire, don't miss out. After tromping up the hill, you'll be rewarded with a warm blanket and a fireside spot in a circle of Adirondack chairs. Before you know it, the staff will arrive with truffled popcorn and an offer of drinks from the nearby bar. And, as you sit under the stars, listening to the snap of the fire, conversation of dinner mates and wind through the trees, you realize that it truly doesn't get any better than this. ✖✖✖

Cinquecento
500 Harrison Ave., Boston
(617-338-9500)
cinquecentoboston.com

APEROL IN THE FAMILY Cinquecento marks the latest addition to the Aquitaine Group's restaurants.

CHEF DE CUISINE JUSTIN Winters has never been to Italy, but you wouldn't know it from Cinquecento's hearty, lovely fare. Located in Rocca's former home, the Aquitaine Group's latest venture has exorcised the '80s airport lounge vibe of its predecessor. In its place are dark woods, metal chairs and brown booths that play up the restaurant's exposed brick walls, framed liquor advertisements and floor-to-ceiling displays of Italian aperitifs. Cinquecento is to an Italian trattoria what its neighbor and sibling Gaslight is to a French brasserie. They embody a concept so thoroughly, from atmosphere to presentation, that they successfully avoid its Disneyfication. That oversized Cynar poster isn't just for decoration; the bar stocks the artichoke amaro ($9) in addition to more than two dozen others. And the guanciale, cured pork cheek omnipresent in Roman cooking, is made in-house.

The restaurant's best dish was the polpetti e sedano ($11.75), a plate of charred, sliced octopus, tender from a salt rub and long braise in red wine and spices. Also delicious was the zuppa di fagioli ($7.50), a bowl of slow-cooked beans, smoked ham and kale topped with Parmesan that, accompanied with bread, could've been an ample winter's meal on its own. Portioned as a main but priced as an appetizer, the cavolo nero e pecorino ($6.50) featured shredded raw Tuscan kale lightly dressed with shaved pecorino, pine nuts and lemon juice for a simple, fresh salad that paved the way for the heavier pastas.

Make sure to go on a Monday for the ravioli di guancia di manzo ($18.50), three large pasta sheets folded like crepes around savory braised beef cheek slightly sweetened from a red-wine reduction. But the gnocchi al sugo di cinghiale ($17.50) is an excellent substitute if you can't make it at the start of the week. Golden raisins mixed with pine nuts, pecorino and braised wild boar gave the airy gnocchi sweetness, texture and dimension.

Part of the Aquitaine Group's formula for success is consistency and reliability (sometimes at the expense of local or seasonal ingredients), which is why it was disconcerting when food was sent out seemingly untasted. Take the tagliata alla Fiorentina ($28.50), or Florentine steak, one of the best steaks I've had in recent memory and capable of feeding two. A sliced Brandt rib eye, served medium-rare as ordered on a sizzling platter, was drizzled with toasted sage oil and accompanied by a confited onion in agrodolce sauce and sautéed garlic spinach. The beef was tender beyond compare while the sauced onion provided sweet and sour notes. But the dish was undone by the first mouthful of gritty spinach, which might as well have been mixed with gravel for its teeth-jarring effect. On another occasion, the spinach was oversalted. The fettucine funghi ($16.75) could've used seasoning of any kind. Perhaps olive oil to separate the clumped, overcooked pasta and bland, undercooked lobster mushrooms. The bucatini alla carbonara ($14.50) tasted as if the noodles were tossed in lard, as evidenced by large bits of unrendered guanciale.

B.N.'s Picks

Polpetti e sedano

Ravioli di guancia di manzo

Torta di zucca

Service was equally spotty. Smooth, solicitous staff inexplicably disappeared after dropping off the dessert menus. The large space and the loud din are part of Cinquecento's appeal, but, as a result, it can be a challenge to get noticed. The service miscues, however, were easily overlooked with an order of the torta di zucca ($8.25)—a warm piece of olive oil zucchini cake that was moist despite the lack of butter—or any of the excellent drinks. Ten handcrafted cocktails ($10 each), a negroni flight ($16), some 20 local and Italian beers and the aforementioned amari ($7–$11), ranging from candy-like Averna to the fierce Fernet Branca, make Cinquecento a serious cocktail destination.

Hopefully the kinks in service and execution will be worked out over time. But until then, there are still many reasons to put Cinquecento on the repeat-restaurant rotation. Sliced octopus, pasta and an abundance of digestifs to explore make Cinquecento a welcome and presumably long-lasting addition to the neighborhood. ✖✖✖

FACIAL FILLERS

Q: I HAVE DEEP LINES FROM MY NOSE TO MY MOUTH THAT MAKE ME LOOK OLD AND TIRED; HOW DO I GET RID OF THEM?

A: Those deep grooves are called nasolabial folds and can be corrected with dermal fillers. Facial fillers are a generic term for a non-surgical procedure to fill-in and plump up lines in the face.

Most facial fillers are made from hyaluronic acid; a clear pliable gel that is found naturally in the body. Brand names include Restylane, Juvederm, Perlane, and Boletero. Fillers are injected directly into facial lines and wrinkles to replace volume lost through the aging process.

The results are immediate: a more youthful appearance with no downtime, no anesthesia, and no surgery. These treatments aren't permanent, but the results can be expected to last 6 to 24 months.

At SkinHealth, our experienced doctors or nurses will assess your needs and recommend the right filler to achieve your desired results.

BETTER OFF DEAD

Time to lay the Die Hard franchise to rest.

A Good Day to Die Hard ★½
Starring Bruce Willis, Jai Courtney, Sebastian Koch and Mary Elizabeth Winstead. Screenplay by Skip Woods. Directed by John Moore. At Boston Common and in the suburbs.

WHEN I WAS 13 YEARS old, sneaking into R-rated movies back in the summer of 1988, Die Hard felt downright revolutionary. Clint Eastwood had just hung up his guns in the fifth and final Dirty Harry flick (The Dead Pool, released the very same week that July), thus passing the proverbial torch for sardonic, wise-cracking, blue-collar cops to Bruce Willis. It's tough to imagine now, but at the time the idea of Willis as an action hero seemed absurd. He was the comedian from TV's Moonlighting, a couple of lousy Blake Edwards movies and those ubiquitous wine cooler commercials. I remember people laughing at the poster: "David Addison with a gun?"

Of course, that incongruity is a big part of what made Die Hard so special. Unlike the Teflon quipsters played by Eastwood, Sly Stallone and Arnold Schwarzenegger, Willis' John McClane was just a regular guy stuck in a situation way above his pay grade. There are plenty of reasons why Die Hard endures as a masterpiece of action filmmaking: the Swiss-watch precision of the plotting, Alan Rickman's incomparable villain, director John McTiernan's exquisite wide-screen compositions. It's become a Burns family tradition to watch it every Christmas Eve.

But what makes Die Hard resonate is that McClane is so relatable. He's not a superhero, just a working-class stiff from Jersey trying to patch up his marriage, and then all these damn German terrorists show up and crash the office party. He's trapped, alone and, quite believably, frightened. For all the larger-than-life stunts, there's still a human-scaled guy in there picking glass out of his bloody feet and trying not to cry when he realizes that he blew it with his wife.

The sequels are mostly junk, even though I'll confess a soft spot for the third film just because I enjoy Willis bouncing his drunken clown routine off of Samuel L. Jackson. But it's a rule of action franchise escalation that everything has to get bigger and more preposterous with each installment (this is why the Dirty Harry movies shrewdly evolved into flat-out comedies). So long gone are the original Die Hard's brilliantly claustrophobic setting and the hero's then-unprecedented vulnerability.

In A Good Day to Die Hard (which someone described as the eighth worst Die Hard movie, even though it's the fifth in the series), McClane has more superpowers than all of the Avengers put together. He's an arrogant, swaggering bulletproof tool barging into situations with guns blazing, never breaking a sweat.

The film begins with an incomprehensible mishmash of plotting that lands McClane's estranged son, Jack (Aussie Jai Courtney, demonstrating Sam Worthington–levels of blandness), in a Moscow jail alongside some sort of political prisoner (The Lives of Others' Sebastian Koch) who must have a file everybody needs because a lot of non-descript villains keep saying into the camera lens, "We need that file."

That's when John McClane comes yippie-kay-yaying his way into Mother Russia, conveniently stumbling into a grotesquely prolonged jailbreak sequence that turns into an incoherently edited car chase taking up most of the picture's 97 minutes. Somehow McClane is able to drive a truck on top of other cars in a traffic jam without killing hundreds of people, and the inconsequential stakes are established when he answers his cell phone mid-melee.

As it turns out, young Jack forgot to tell his father that he's a CIA agent, and the elder McClane's bullheadedness just blew a three-year undercover operation. I'm a little fuzzy on the details here because the screenplay doesn't provide many, but the rest of the movie consists of barely audible father-and-son bickering while ducking gunfire. Pretty much every scene ends with them being shot at from a helicopter, and the McClane boys are able to get out of any situation by jumping from precipitous heights in slow motion. There's nothing to hang onto here, and director John Moore can't even orient us within a physical space, let alone modulate the tone. It's a monotonous cacophony from start to finish.

Even sadder is that Willis seems to have forgotten how to play McClane. The actor's been on a roll lately with great turns in Looper and Moonrise Kingdom, but here he just squints and insults people, looking vaguely disinterested in the mayhem all around. He's pushy and bullies his kid, who strikes me as having some pretty good reasons for disliking his dad. When did John McClane become such a d?

The most telling moment in A Good Day to Die Hard arrives about halfway through, when our two heroes realize they can just pack it in and go home if they feel like it. I wished they would, just so I could leave, too. ✖✖✖

Tame Impala
plays House of Blues on March 12.

GOTYE'S NOT THE ONLY home-studio wunderkind in the land Down Under. In Australia's West Coast city of Perth, Kevin Parker holes himself up to conjure the psychedelic atmospheres of Tame Impala.

"The rest of the world doesn't care about Perth, and Perth doesn't care about the rest of the world," Parker says. "There's amazing weather, and the pace of life is at a blissfully slow rate."

The 26-year-old musician spent about two years tinkering by himself in his aural abode to produce Tame Impala's second album, Lonerism, one of 2012's most evocative rock releases. "It's an obsessive, sonic pursuit," Parker says of the process. "It's just the way I've always done it, making music in what was once a bedroom and then a studio."

The results echo another time and place. With its hazy, melancholic thrust, Lonerism evokes the lo-fi experimentation of Beck and the Flaming Lips (whose producer Dave Fridmann mixed the album). Yet Parker nods to early '70s prog-pop influences like Todd Rundgren and Supertramp as well as late-era Beatles. Lonerism's first single, "Elephant," also throws in dark, descending chord progressions that reflect nascent Pink Floyd.

"It's only going back and analyzing it that we realize that the production is really kind of '70s," says the Australian multi-instrumentalist, songwriter and producer. "What I'm trying to do is just make it sound awesome, make it crunchy and thumping and not too high-def."

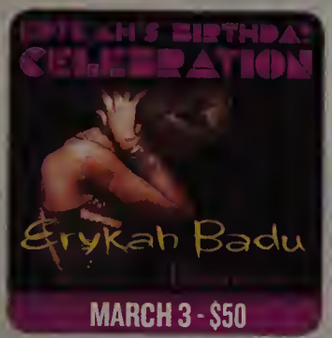
Parker's filtered vocals help convey a sense of distance that clicks with his isolation-themed lyrics and album title. "I'm just incapable of listening to my own voice," Parker says. "It's only when I double-track and put effects on it, and bury it in reverb and delay, that it starts to make me feel something."

In turn, Lonerism balances winsome pop choruses and dense instrumental waves. "It's just a matter of putting together all these things that affect me, that I get an emotion out of," he says. "It's the way that pop music is so sweet and instantaneously emotional and accessible, and then you add totally fed up sounds and drums that are distorting. You're adding explosive sounds. It's like mixing a drink."

Parker supplies most of the ingredients for his dreamy cocktail, playing vintage synthesizers and bass in addition to his toggled lead guitar. He uses a drum kit to clomp over the layers. He also floats in snippets of conversation, footsteps and other sounds that he records with a Dictaphone as he travels, citing the example of a megaphone speaker he heard when Tame Impala's tour bus was boarding a Scandinavian ferry at 3 am. "It woke me up, and it was just an amazing sound to hear," he says. "Sounds, for me, just have so much more atmosphere than photos. So it's kind of my way of taking photos."

When it's time to transfer his ethereal studio snapshots to the stage, Parker sticks to lead vocals and guitar and assembles his Tame Impala mates—Dom Simper (guitar, vocals), Jay Watson (keyboards, vocals), Nick Allbrook (bass) and Julien Barbagallo (drums)—to divvy up the other parts. "The recorded version already exists, and it's there for people to listen to, so what we do with it onstage is a different story," says Parker, whose band plays House of Blues on March 12. "It's totally up to what sounds cool."

That is, until the next time that he sequesters himself in his Perth studio. "You have your own space, time and ideas, and can be as honest as you want because you're not self-conscious about anyone else being in the room," he says. "There's no one to argue with, and you can take an idea to the extreme."



Working alone, nonetheless, presents what most people would consider a negative. "You waste a lot of time and get sidetracked," Parker says, "but being sidetracked is also a beautiful thing." ×××

IT'S A SETUP

My nemesis, the playground set

I DON'T NORMALLY WRITE about parenting, but right now I feel compelled to regale you non-kid-havers with a tale from the wonderful world of children's products. Kid-related stuff is a wilderness of shoddy and half-baked crap—strollers that remove your fingers, indoor tents that collapse into a pile of sharp poles, battery-powered toys where the AAAs are accessed via a screw so small you need a jeweler's loupe to find it. Children grow up, and stuff gets passed on before anyone has time to complain. Unfortunately for me, my sister-in-law recently deemed that her offspring outgrew one such item, which is how I fell into the diabolical, soul-crushing crevasse of hopelessness known as Rainbow Play Systems.

The website Pissed Consumer has more than 30 entries for Rainbow Play Systems and Rainbow's own Facebook page is a litany of misery: "This truly has been the most awful customer experience I've ever had," reads one post. "Why would you turn down money to move the swing set for me?" says another. I know why: Because Rainbow Play Systems are about as portable as the Hoover Dam.

When my sister-in-law offered to give us her playground set, with its rock-climbing wall and monkey bars, its parapets and balustrades, I foresaw a future in which this pile of lumber would become my weekend-killing nemesis. In a futile attempt to avoid this fate, I'd say things to my wife like, "You know, public playgrounds are so great." And "One thing about public playgrounds, you don't have to assemble them." But she was determined that we would have our own private playground, like we were modern-day Vanderbilts. Hey, it was free.

Well, nothing's free.

I disassembled this monstrosity and carted it over to our house with a U-Haul trailer, an experience that cemented the decision to have someone else reassemble the thing. Putting it back together would clearly require two people, and I don't hate anyone enough to make them help me assemble the Rainbow Play Systems Tower of Tears.

For the not inconsiderable sum of $500, Rainbow agreed to reconstitute its hellish Jenga set in our yard. On the appointed day, the installer arrived solo. I know for a fact that the only way you can assemble the Rainbow Playground Colossus by yourself is if you happen to be a superintelligent bionic octopus that escaped from a military laboratory. And even then, the monkey bars might still cause you to strain a tentacle.

Sure enough, after about an hour the guy knocked on the door and asked me to help. Now I faced a conundrum: I could refuse, leaving the playground in large pieces scattered about my yard, or I could help overhead-press the 200-pound monkey bars into place, despite the fact that I was paying $500 specifically for the privilege of having nothing to do with this process. I chose the latter. Build now, protest later.

And this is where I entered the realm of Rainbow's famous customer service. The distributor, before he stopped answering his phone, argued that I didn't need to help, and he'd have to investigate why (or if) I did. Never mind that according to Rainbow's own assembly manual, there are multiple pages that read, "Note: at least two people are required to complete this step." That seems pretty clear.

Eventually, we went with the nuclear option: contesting the service charge. I've never contested a credit card charge because I've never had a situation that couldn't be resolved by talking to the person on the other side of the deal. But this character is a different breed. I imagine if we'd stopped by his office, he'd run out the back dressed as an old lady, like Whitey Bulger used to do.

The lesson in all this? Never do anything for your kids. I'm joking! The real lesson is that you should never have kids in the first place. Ha ha! No, kids are great. But do you know how much kids cost? If so, don't tell me because I don't want to know what kind of a yacht I could afford if I were childless. But I'll bet it would be measured in some rich-people unit of length that the rest of us don't even know about. You'd say, "My boat is 10 horses long. I don't even know how many feet that is."

Instead, I have a playground set. And a fine enough playground set it is. While I'm not too hopeful that the Visa goon squad will alter our friendly local distributor's commitment to customer non-satisfaction, I guess I can at least fantasize about the day when the kids are grown, and I can disassemble our playground set, load it on a truck and dump its rotting carcass on the lawn of the nearest company showroom. Like Dorothy in The Wizard of Oz, I'm over the Rainbow. ×××

RENEE PARRIS BROWN & ASSOCIATES

LET THE CONVERSATION BEGIN NOW.

Q My 80-year-old mother has been seeing the same doctor for 35 years. And guess what? They are the same age. For at least a year, she has been complaining of stomach problems and refuses to see any other physician. How do I convince her to see another doctor?

—A Rock and a Hard Place

A Many people share your experience. At the end of the day, your mom will most likely do what she wants to do. However, there are ways of getting the wheels in motion.

First, discuss the situation with someone your mom listens to. It could be her 76 year old best friend or another confident. Enlist their help explaining the situation and that your mom is very likely fearful of taking that first step of seeing another doctor, someone they do not know, nor have they established a relationship with. Sometimes people her age feel they don't want to go against their doctor or seek another opinion as this very action may strain the doctor patient relationship that she values.

As your mom is complaining of abdominal pain, a specialist in Gastroenterology is a good place to start. Her primary doctor sounds like an internist; therefore, it would make sense to see a specialist now after a year without relief. Once you feel you have her ear, let her know you've contacted her doctor who agrees with seeing a specialist at this time. Sometimes doctors are relieved to have the support of family in ensuring mom feels safe in making the decision and following through with the evaluation.

Soroff On GEOFF EDGERS

The Travel Channel host speaks out on fruitcake catapults, monster trucks and skiing with Norse gods.

BOSTON GLOBE REPORTER GEOFF EDGERS, 42, IS THE HOST OF THE Travel Channel's new series Edge of America. A graduate of Tufts, he's written for GQ, Details, Spin, Wired and salon.com, interviewed everyone from Hunter S. Thompson to Julie Andrews, and written a pair of children's books about music. His 2010 documentary, Do It Again, is about his misguided attempt to reunite the Kinks. Edgers' show, which debuted in January, immerses him in the bizarre side of entertainment, having him experience everything from bike-jousting to chainsaw sculpting. He lives in Concord with his wife and two children.

Jonathan Soroff: Strangest thing you've encountered on your show so far?
Geoff Edgers: Probably castrating a bull on the first day of shooting a TV show. That was pretty extreme.

What's the hardest part about the transition from print to TV?
Going from being someone who's not supposed to be in the story to being somebody who HAS to be in it. It opens you up to embarrass yourself or annoy people in ways I'd never dreamed possible.

How do you find the things you cover?
We have a team of 70–80 researchers, all trained at Yale, trying to get me a rattlesnake heart. No, seriously, we're cultural scientists. And the reality is that most of us live in a bubble, but when you look around the country—for instance, people in Arkansas are paying $750 to see Cro-Magnon Rolling Stones—everywhere, people are doing these amazing things to entertain themselves.

Most physically uncomfortable experience you've had?
I'd say riding in an inner-tube at Mudfest in Louisiana. It was freezing. I'd never been in an inner-tube being pulled by a monster truck. Mud goes in places you never thought it would. I was sneezing mud for days.

Three undiscovered things in Boston?
I'm not going to be great at that because, even though I'm from here, we haven't done a Massachusetts show. It takes research. But one thing to keep in mind: Each episode has three separate pretty cool and unusual things, and sometimes we spend hours driving from one to the other.

A lot of places you can drive 10 hours and still not be in another state.
Last week, I climbed an ice wall in Ouray, Colo., at supposedly the world's best ice climbing park, and the next day, I drove seven hours to shoot a fruitcake out of a catapult, and I was still in Colorado.

Any phobias or fears?
I'm scared of everything! I don't know how to answer that because I am scared of snakes. I jumped on an eight-foot alligator in Florida. I was terrified. I've shot stuff, and I have no history with guns. Almost everything I do intimidates me in one way or another.

So what was the easiest for you?
The other day, I did something I was familiar with at a festival in Colorado. It was for a Norse King named Ullr, and I skied down the mountain with him. That I could handle. But I don't know how to fly a seaplane or any of the animal stuff. I should also point out that I do have insurance and have to sign a death waiver almost every time.

Favorite place you've been where you'd want to live?
I really liked this town, Mountain View, Ariz. Part of it is sort of a return to nature. There was awesome food. Everyone was real friendly. The weather was perfect. And a nice house was like $85,000.

Place you'd never set foot in again?
I'm going to International Falls, Minn., on Saturday for Icebox Days. It's the coldest place in the country, and they have a 5 or 10K race that they had to cancel a few years ago when it was 72 degrees below zero. I'm not really looking forward to it. Other than that? I don't really like Las Vegas.

Have you ever had to say, "Sorry. I just can't do that."
Yeah. At one point, somebody wanted me to get into this flying machine. It was at a rock crawling festival, which is like monster trucks going straight up a mountain. It looks like the Audubon Society, except you're destroying the environment. So a guy asked me to get into this hang glider–like contraption, and I said, "This is a little too sketchy."

How much of it is a dare?
That's exactly it. It's not. Only maybe three things I've done were foods that are strange to me, but it's all stuff that thousands of people are doing and enjoying. There's a lot of hillbilly TV that makes fun of people from small places. I don't. Those places have figured out their own way to enjoy themselves.

As a writer, story you're most proud of?
A story I did about Keith Lockhart a few years ago. It was July Fourth, and what I loved about it is that he's seen as this airbrushed character. At the time, the Pops was sort of struggling, and he was going through a divorce, and I feel like he let me just see him as a person, which resulted in a good story. I felt like there was nothing fake about it.

What part of the U.S. is the most bizarre?
Impossible to say. There's nowhere that crazy stuff isn't happening. It can be New York, where I played old-time baseball with guys dressed like it was the 1860s, with all sorts of lingo and arcane rules, to Arkansas, where I did an outhouse race.

What about commercialized adventures?
I don't begrudge anyone having fun however they want. But it's like an African safari ordered through a catalogue. I'm not down on it, but I'm also not going to travel a long way to do it. If you tell me there's a llama hike somewhere nearby, I'm there. But I'm not a thrill-seeker for the sake of thrill-seeking. I'm a grown man with children.

If you could choose how you were going to die, what would it be?
A tragic blimp accident. ×××

ALE OR NOTHING

LET THE AMATEURS HAVE March 17. The folks at Harpoon Brewery know Bostonians shouldn't be confined to just one day of good beer and festive foodstuffs. Start the holiday early at Harpoon's annual St. Patrick's Festival. This year marks the celebration's 20th anniversary and includes performances from bagpipers Colum Cille Pipes and Drums and the U2 cover band Joshua Tree. Toast with Harpoon's Celtic Ale, an Irish red brewed specially for the season, before getting your corned beef and cabbage fix. Hibernian pride and draft beer flow freely among the crowd March 1–2 at Harpoon Brewery.

MADELEINE COLEMAN

St. Patrick's Festival is on March 1, 5:30 pm, and March 2, 2 pm, $20, 21+, Harpoon Brewery, 306 Northern Ave., Boston (617-574-9551) harpoonbrewery.com.

Let's Get Metaphysical

A Bug's Life Family members can be pests, a premise taken to the extreme in Metamorphosis. When traveling salesman Gregor Samsa wakes up to the startling discovery that he's been transformed into an arthropod, his parents' and sister's affections quickly vanish. This dramedy, based on Franz Kafka's 1915 novella, explores what happens when you become unbearable to those closest to you (especially if you're a grown man still living at home). The split-level stage offers a fly-on-the-wall view of Samsa's bedroom, where he must stay hidden, so he doesn't bug his loved ones. Watch the family feud unfold at the Paramount Center Mainstage through March 3. Sarah Hagman

Blood Brothers

It's All Relative

As it turns out, blood isn't always thicker than water. The documentarian becomes the subject in Stevie, which follows the relationship between award-winning director Steve James and the young teenager he mentored, Stevie, through the Big Brothers Big Sisters program. When he visits Stevie 10 years later, James finds an unstable and unpredictable adult, scarred by a childhood of abuse and neglect. When Stevie's arrested and facing serious jail time, James' profile turns into a film about the Illinois foster care system, the broken courts and what it means to love someone, faults and all. See how this life story unfolds at UMass Boston's Campus Center Ballroom on Feb. 28.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At West Newton.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Beautiful Creatures ★ ½ Here's another gobbledygook of Y.A. paranormal romance, this one arriving on the heels of the comparatively lean and considerably less ambitious Warm Bodies. Beautiful Creatures finds the fine writer/director Richard LaGravenese mired in a swamp of overplotted teensploitation nonsense with a cast that's way too good for the room, and knows it. Based on a sprawling novel by Kami Garcia and Margaret Stohl, this curious picture stars Alden Ehrenreich as a swaggering, free-spirited teenager biding his time in the backwoods of South Carolina, reading banned books for kicks. He finally puts down that dog-eared copy of Slaughterhouse-Five to pay attention to the new girl in school (Alice Englert), who may or may not be a witch. Yeah, it's Twilight redux minus the vaguely psychotic abstinence lectures, plus a couple of scenery-chewing turns by Jeremy Irons and Emma Thompson. There's an air of contempt to the picture, with a lot of talented actors openly acknowledging that they probably should be doing something more productive with their time. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Broken City ★★★ Mark Wahlberg's annual entry in the January release dump (last year's was the not-bad Contraband) is a cynical little neo-noir elevated by Russell Crowe's magnificently oily, hambone performance as the cuckolded mayor of New York City, who hires Marky Mark's alcoholic thug private eye to keep tabs on his wandering wife (Catherine Zeta-Jones.) Of course there's also a close election to be dealt with and Crowe's possibly gay opponent (Barry Pepper) knows a thing or two about a shady real estate deal that just lined everybody's pockets. Scripted by first-timer Brian Tucker, Broken City is lowercase Bogart and wannabe Sidney Lumet, but not without its own, admittedly minor, pleasures. The movie has a jaded, boorish spirit embodied with lip-smacking ease by the two alpha male leads. There's even a pause to make time for a delightful tangent in which our hero falls off the wagon and insults art-film metrosexuals. Director Allen Hughes keeps the camera close and the edits crisp. No great shakes, but it's a solid B-movie programmer. (In the suburbs.)

Bullet to the Head ★★ ½ An agreeably pared-down meathead vehicle, legendary director Walter Hill's latest slab of pulp stars Sylvester Stallone as an aging hit man who teams up with a straight-arrow cop (Fast & Furious' Sung Kang) to avenge his dead partner and kill most of the people in New Orleans. Based on a French graphic novel, Alessandro Camon's screenplay is barely functional direct-to-video fodder, enlivened by Hill's crisp editing, some offhanded brutality and one of Stallone's more amusing performances. Rolling his eyes at notions of common decency, Sly's Jimmy Bobo (what a name!) lackadaisically slaughters his way through a slew of crooked cops and sleazy politicians with an air of annoyance, like he's just been woken up from a nap. The picture proudly resides in a retro B-movie gutter full of gratuitous nudity, casual drug use, racial slurs and self-consciously hard-boiled dialogue. Every conversation seems to end with somebody getting

Creature Feature

shot in the face. Your personal mileage may vary, but I enjoy this kind of junk. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rot-gut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Gangster Squad ★ ½ Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's unintentionally funny new film is so slick and glossy, I almost slipped on it. Half of Hollywood's cool crowd has been laughably miscast to put on an anachronistic fashion show, caring not a whit for historical accuracy or any semblance of period detail. The 1940s jargon clangs with the contemporary performances, and every set looks like a soundstage built yesterday. The Ellroy for Dummies plot concerns legendary racketeer Mickey Cohen, played here by Sean Penn beneath hideous prosthetic makeup and grotesque physical contortions. Josh Brolin's incorruptible cop, who wears one sour facial expression the whole movie, is recruited by Nick Nolte's wheezy police chief to head up a crew of vigilantes who leave their badges at home to take out Cohen's L.A. gambling operations by any means necessary. Ryan Gosling tackles the Doc Holliday role of a morally dubious, skirt-chasing lush by amusing himself in the ludicrous film in which he's trapped. His omnipresent smirk betrays a contempt for the material rivaled only by my own. (Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but, if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Bitter Pill to Swallow

Brain Games

Rooney Mara stars as a patient who becomes unhinged after taking a new drug in Side Effects.

BOSTON RISING Up We Go

the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Parker ★ ½ At first glance, Jason Statham seems like perfect casting for pulp maestro Donald E. Westlake's coldly calculating anti-hero, previously played by Lee Marvin in Point Blank, Robert Duvall in The Outfit and Mel Gibson in Payback. But director Taylor Hackford does both his star and the character a terrible disservice, softening them both for a flabby adaptation of Flashfire, one of the twenty-something heist novels Westlake wrote under the pseudonym Richard Stark. Hackford seems to think the audience will only root for Parker (Statham) if he's also a really nice guy, so he commits random acts of kindness during the usual double crosses and cold-blooded killings. The pacing is flaccid and the videography terrible—Parker looks like a soap opera. Parker is weirdly neutered, spending too much time narrating about his code of ethics while Jennifer Lopez offers a welcome bit of sass in a disposable eye candy role that doesn't have much to do with the story. What else is there to say about a movie in which J.Lo gives the best performance? (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (In the suburbs.)

This Is 40 ★★ Clearly aspiring to be the John Cassavetes of penis jokes, writer/director Judd Apatow turns inward for This Is 40, a semi-autobiographical sprawl with some honest moments strewn about the shapeless bickering. Paul Rudd and Leslie Mann reprise their roles as the devoted but dissatisfied married couple who stole Apatow's 2007 surprise smash Knocked Up. It's probably not the savviest move at this moment in the zeitgeist to try and elicit sympathy for wealthy folks living beyond their means. (Let's just say that Apatow's idea of financial distress is a good deal comfier than my own experience.) The meandering first hour and a half of this absurdly overlong movie successfully depicts the day-to-day grind of family life, unflinchingly chronicling all the temper tantrums, petty slights and lack of privacy that come with any prolonged cohabitation. The rougher parts are salvaged only by a sublime turn from Albert Brooks. Apatow's honesty is commendable, but after 134 minutes you'll wish he'd kept some things to himself. (In the suburbs.)

Warm Bodies ★★ ½ Working from a popular novel by Isaac Marion, writer/director Jonathan Levine takes an unexpectedly clever spin around some well-trod terrain. Our hero, R (Nicholas Hoult, who'll make you feel very old when you realize he's the kid from About a Boy), is an undead hipster who falls head over heels with Teresa Palmer's feisty heroine, Julie, sometime after the end of the world. It's an awkward courtship, to say the least. But a strange thing happens as he hangs out with her. R stops rotting and starts remembering things. Apparently, love does conquer all, even zombiehood. Marion's book was a riff on Romeo and Juliet (in case the main character's names didn't tip you off), but it's easy to view Levine's adaptation as a devastatingly funny send-up of the Twilight phenomenon. I was at a Barnes & Noble recently and saw an entire section devoted to "teen paranormal romance." Warm Bodies is at its funniest when the film is digging into the messy details of just how such romances might work. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong rip-off. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Wise Up

In a harmonious act of procrastination, five friends began writing demos while studying for finals. Grades be damned, they formed Autumn Owls. Now a three-piece band, the Irish trio released two well-received EPs in 2008, followed by the spring 2012 release Between Buildings, Toward the Sea, their first full-length album. Produced by Brian Deck (Counting Crows, Iron and Wine and Modest Mouse), Between Buildings consists of haunting tracks with sorrowful, powerful lyrics. Catch these Dubliners at the Bell in Hand on Feb. 28.

Life's a Beech

Lumber Along

An amalgamation of smooth and rough, arms and legs, weak and strong collide on a thin piece of weathered wood as Susan Lyman wrestles frail bodies into solid trunks. Exploring nature's connection with humanity, Lyman uses scavenged and fallen wood in her works, manipulating the gnarled bark and smoothing the grain into shining curves that evoke human sensuality. See Lyman's models and paintings in her exhibit Sculpture in Wood at Boston Sculptors Gallery through March 3.

Acting Ladylike

Miss Behave

As the saying goes, well-behaved women rarely make history. In the graphic novel Bad Girls, Heidi Stemple and Jane Yolen investigate and profile 26 of history's most wicked ladies. The mother-and-daughter authors go beyond the cold, hard facts to see if there's more to the story than mere criminal acts. From Cleopatra to Mae West, Stemple and Yolen argue for the innocence or prosecution of the notorious figures. On March 2 at the Wellesley Free Library, the Wellesley Theatre Project helps bring this cast of scandalous characters to life. Come decide if these femme fatales have earned their reputations.

RESTAURANTS

ABE & LOUIE'S [793 Boylston Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-536-6300, abeandlouies.com] Abe & Louie's is the quintessential American steakhouse, serving prime cuts of corn fed, Midwestern beef, fresh seafood and garden produce. Steaks are aged on the bone for six weeks to ensure maximum flavor. Signature dishes include the bone-in filet mignon, NY sirloin and swordfish chop. With its high quality food, outstanding service and classic interiors, this award-winning restaurant has consistently remained a Boston favorite since its debut in 1998.

THE BLACK ROSE [160 State Street, Boston, 617-742-2286, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Voted one of America's top ten Irish establishments, The Black Rose is Boston's premier Irish pub and restaurant. Established in 1976, the pub is located in the historic Faneuil Hall/Quincy Market area of Boston, and known far and wide for its convivial atmosphere, good food and live Irish entertainment. The menu features honest, made-from-scratch food including traditional Irish fare, award winning clam chowder, fish and chips, native lobster, aged Black Angus cuts of beef, and of course Mother Sweeney's corned beef – a recipe from Mother Sweeney herself! For thirty years The Black Rose has offered live Irish music seven nights a week. Memorable guests on stage have included members of the Chieftans, flutist James Galway, Tommy Makim, Liam Clancy, John Denver, and a once relatively unknown member of an Irish rock group called U2.

BROWNSTONE [11 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA, 617-867-4142, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Situated on the border of Back Bay and the South End, Brownstone is named for the style and elegance reflective of the architecture of Boston's two neighborhoods. From the hardwood flooring to the Venetian plaster ceiling, the interior exudes classic warmth with a sleek and intimate bar made of mahogany and granite. Brownstone's menu features small plates with big flavors! It also has one of the best brunches in Back Bay and Monthly Beer and Wine Dinners.

COOGANS [171 Milk Street, Boston, 617-451-7415, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Located on the corner of laid back and good times, Coogan's is a business man's retreat by day and party people destination by night. Just on the edge of the Financial District, Coogan's is a cozy little neighborhood bar. Friendly Staff serves up fresh American style pub food and some of the best deals in Boston.

DOUZO MODERN JAPANESE RESTAURANT & LOUNGE [131 Dartmouth Street, Boston, MA 02116, 617-859-8886.] Douzo is a Modern Japanese Restaurant and Lounge located in Boston's Back Bay/South End neighborhood. A beautiful and modern decor to complement a wide range of traditional and innovative menu items. Serving only the freshest and highest quality ingredients available for the best taste. Valet parking is available Wednesday through Saturday and validated parking for the adjoining parking garage after 5pm. Take-out and delivery offered daily as well with pre-packed sushi Monday through Sunday.

HURRICANE O'REILLY'S [150 Canal Street, Boston, 617-722-0161, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] It's Hurricane season on Canal Street! The spirit of Mardi Gras and the French Quarter in the heart of the city. Serving Irish, American and Cajun specialties and conveniently located just steps away from the TD Garden. Voted best "Hockey Bar" in Boston by USA today, Hurricane's is the perfect place to gather pre- and post-game. After the sun sets on Canal Street, Hurricane's lights up into one of Boston's hottest nightclubs with a top 40 play list, illuminating disco lights and 6,800 square feet of Mardi Gras spirit.

JOE'S AMERICAN BAR & GRILL [9 locations in the Boston greater area, visit joesamerican.com] Joe's serves classic American comfort food in a comfortable setting, making it a local favorite for lunch, dinner, weekend brunch or take-out. Everything is made in-house, from the famous clam chowder to their juicy burgers or fall-off-the bone ribs. With carved wood, stained glass and vintage lighting, Joe's is reminiscent of your favorite New England watering hole. Try the bloody mary or one of their local beers on tap.

---

JOSE MCINTYRE'S [160 Milk Street, Boston. 617-451-9460, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Jose McIntyre's is located across from the Aquarium on Milk Street. This is Boston's only Mexican-Irish restaurant and bar. For close to two decades Jose's has been an institution with the after work and late night party crowds. If the Dos Equis man is the world's most interesting man, Jose McIntyre is the world's most entertaining. Come experience the most unique venue in Boston. With 5 rooms, 3 bars, 2 floors and a game room; José is the perfect place to unwind with co-workers or host a celebration.

---

MISTRAL [223 Columbus Ave, Boston, 617-867-9300, mistralbistro.com] Located in Boston's stylish South End, Mistral features the award winning French Mediterranean cuisine of Chef/Owner Jamie Mammano. The dining room's high ceilings and arched floor to ceiling windows encircle the candlelit room and evoke a warm feeling of casual sophistication. Le Salon du Mistral, Mistral's private dining room provides an intimate setting for gatherings of 60 seated for brunch, lunch and dinner and up to 80 for a cocktail reception. Sunday Brunch. Dinner Sunday-Saturday. Complimentary car service available in metro Boston.

---

NUBAR [16 Garden St., Cambridge MA, 02138, 617-234-1365, nubarcambridge.com] Nubar is an elegant, but comfortable neighborhood restaurant in the Harvard Square area. Chef Bill Flumerfelt's menu is creative American, with Mediterranean accents, sourcing locally whenever available. The wine list and our original cocktails will tickle your palette – great flavors for reasonable $.Whether you're in our fireside lounge, at our glowing honey onyx bar, or on our leather banquettes in the main dining room, you'll love our space.

SAMBA STEAK & SUSHI HOUSE [1138 Worcester Rd. (Rt 9E) Framingham, MA 01702, 508-628-0288] Samba Steak and Sushi House is MetroWest's hidden gem and the perfect place to host your company holiday party. Our private function room seats 20 - 100 people and is ideal for either an intimate gathering or a festive fete. Samba will customize a package suited specifically for your tastes, including a variety of entertainment options. Call 508-628-0288 to discuss your holiday plans.

Come also to enjoy Boston's award winning steam beer burgers and famous curly fries, original buffalo wings and giant nachos. Still hungry? Try our juicy BBQ steak tips, grilled fish, homemade pastas, tender Yankee ribs or our sizzling fajitas. Full menu until 1 a.m.

TEATRO [177 TremontStreet, Boston, 617-778-6841, teatroboston.com] A leading player in downtown's Theatre District, Teatro offers Chef Owner Jamie Mammano's take on rustic Italian cuisine. The restaurant recalls lavish stage productions and high drama with its stunning arched mosaic ceiling and marble inlaid walls. The triumphant curtain call — a riveting open kitchen. Enjoy pre- and post-show cocktails, plus your star turn for dinner Tuesday through Sunday evenings. (Closed Monday).

BARS & CLUBS

DILLON'S [955 Boylston Street, Boston, 617-421-1818, glynnhospitalitygroup.com] Dillon's blends after-work chill with cocktail chic. It's the ideal spot to bring a date, loosen your tie after work or watch the game with friends. Built in 1887 and a historic landmark in Boston, the venue is named after Capt. S. Dillon, who was stationed here from 1920-1950. Like its namesake, Dillon's is known for its warm hospitality, engaging people and spirited nightlife. An all American menu, two levels, and the best patio in the Back Bay make Dillon's a local favorite. The best place on Boylston to celebrate!

CLERYS [113 DARTMOUTH STREET, BOSTON, 617-262-9874, glynnhospitalitygroup.com]* Located a block from Copley Plaza at the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, this bistro and bar has consistently earned the title "Boston's Best Neighborhood Bar". Enjoy one of the 21 draught beers, either at one of the three bars, by the bistro windows, or by the fireplace in a cozy booth when the fickle New England weather turns cold. It's the perfect place to meet friends and enjoy a comfortable atmosphere with fast & friendly bartenders. On select nights partake in team trivia or dance the night away with DJ Rhythm Nights. Downstairs is a private and roomy space featuring a full bar and dance floor, and is the perfect nook for company functions and holiday parties.

SIBLING ACT

Go Big or Go Home

No charity event is more aptly named than Big Night to benefit Big Brothers Big Sisters of Massachusetts Bay.

As always, the party pulled out all the stops. Held at House of Blues, the evening began with a reception in the Foundation Room, where celebrity oyster shuckers Seth and Angela Raynor and CJ Husk kept the bivalves flying, while headlining act Grace Potter performed an acoustic set.

Prominent among the throng were such do-gooders as big cheese Tim Dibble, emcee and Incredible Shrinking Man Lenny Clarke, his wicked pissah wife, Jen, legendary Vineyard fisherman Buddy Vanderhoop and his lovely other half, Lisa, affable goofball Billy Meara and the heart-stoppingly lovely Christine, blonde beauty Betsy Gifford and her handsome other half, Charlie, Olympic gold medalist AJ Mleczko and her dapper husband, Jason Griswold, red hot mama Emily Rooney, the eternally tanned George Regan, newly hirsute Mike Morris, brunette lunachick Allison Mazer and her partner in crime, Erica Corsano, blue-blooded restaurateur George Lewis, impish finance titan Peter Monaco, and just about everyone else in the venture capitalist/hedge fund manager income bracket.

Once everyone was well lubricated, the party started in earnest when Grace Potter and the Nocturnals took the stage along with Sharon Jones (sadly sans the Dap Kings). The show was one for the record books, and those who didn't enjoy it heartily have only themselves to blame.

After all, as one guest observed, "How can you not love a thousand-dollar-a-head fund-raiser where you can wear jeans and a T-shirt?"

If He's a Real Scotsman

Once again, the American Repertory Theater put the "a-r-t" in party, with its annual gala held at the Revere Hotel.

Starting things off was a cocktail reception where guests could mingle with dreamy Glass Menagerie (and Star Trek) star Zachary Quinto, the breathtakingly sexy Dina Selkoe and her not bad other half, Greg, gorgeous wine merchants TJ and Hadley Douglas, honoree Linda Nathan, board chair Don Ware, more Krupps than you could shake a stick at, Cambridge chatelaine Joan Parker, breathtaking blonde Sally Taylor and her handsome husband, Dean Bragonier, flawless philanthropist Jeannette Hsu-McSweeney, redheaded radio babe Kennedy, theater legend John Douglas Thompson, the bedazzled Susan Kaplan, party pair Erin Gilligan and Hoyle Kim, Teutonic rock star Molly Schoeck, the über-fabulous Maud Cabot, and so on and so forth down the strictly A-list.

Lenny Clarke and Tim Brett at Big Night

Seth and Angela Raynor at Big Night

AJ Mleczko and Tim Dibble at Big Night

Suzie Tapson, Julia Owens and Leigh Denny at Planned Parenthood

A superb dinner was followed by a sneak peek at the piece that visionary director Diane Paulus is working on with Cirque du Soleil, which left everyone breathless.

The evening's award for good citizenship goes to the person who tactfully explained to a woman that her dress was tucked into her underwear. Meanwhile, overheard in the men's room: A guy standing next to a man in a kilt at the urinals said, "I imagine wearing that makes this a lot easier."

What Not to Wear

Q: What's short and sweet and has you home in time to watch at least two episodes of Family Guy before bed?

A: Planned Parenthood's annual Celebration of Choices gala, held at the Mandarin Oriental, Boston.

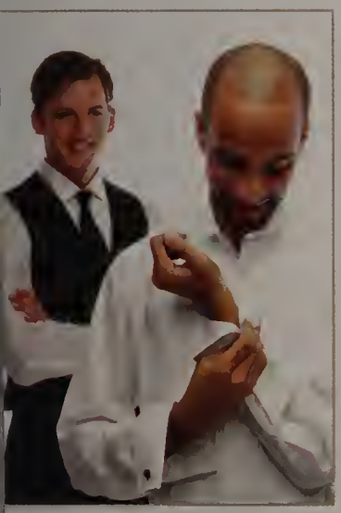
The crowd of major big-shots included cochairs Julia Owens, Suzie Tapson and Anne Columbia, the honorable judge Nonnie Burnes, Pill Hillions Coco and Kyra Montague, impish venture capitalist Chad Jackson, the swanlike Nina Longtine, force of nature Brit d'Arbeloff, the simply stunning Susan Whitehead, brunette cutie Jojo Longnecker, the ubiquitous Leigh Denny, blonde beauty Meredith Clapp, the exquisite Elizabeth Lowery, eminence grise Tarleton Watkins, and others of an equally elevated ilk.

Following cocktails, a light supper was served, during which honoree Dianne Luby was both feted and roasted (for being an avid birder), and the evening marked the first time the event raised a million dollars.



The best exchange, meanwhile, was between a pair of sisters comparing fashion disasters.

"I can't zip my skirt up all the way," said one, to which the other answered, "I was going to wear a different dress, but it made me look like I had three boobs." ×××

Pulp Fiction and Bad Art

I once spent two years writing a spectacularly misconceived historical novel about the Battle of the Teutoberg Forest in 9 A.D. It was an idea so dumb that it's hard to shrug off as a (scrupulously researched) lapse of judgment. More likely I was host to a brain-eating bacteria that pooped out 572 pages of lines like, "The serving girl was a fine piece of ticklish, wild-haired trouble," or, in an iambic vein, "'Pray tell,' said I, / 'The workings of this host / That steeped in blood the sands of Afric coast, / And cleaned their boots where once the Pharaoh stood. / That makes the badger tremble in his wood.'" But, then, I like to clump anything I wrote before last week under the tag of regrettable juvenilia. Come to think of it, my artistic talents have ripened so much since that bacteria joke, I'm disavowing the beginning of this paragraph. Tsk. Amateur.

Despite a few OK jabs at classical Stoicism, the novel was a quaking embarrassment of lard and filched ideas, less in need of an editor's scalpel than of a thermonuclear bomb. I had disgorged the whole mess on the premise that my weird mania for Roman military disasters meant that other people liked them, too. This is one of the problems of bad art. Bad art is convinced that the festering mutant fungus congealed to a tree root is, in fact, the whole forest. It misses the point that art ought to resonate with other human beings.

In our Spring Arts Preview, we look at shows, exhibits and organizations that'll resonate soundly with all sorts of audiences.

BEE PREPARED

SEVEN YEARS AGO, MILLIONS OF honeybees abandoned their hives. Just up and flew away. Researchers worldwide found that the bees were not only mysteriously disappearing but also dying at an alarming rate. The causes of this condition, dubbed colony collapse disorder (CCD), are still largely unknown, but the implications are tangible. In the U.S., honey is a $150 million business, and bees help sustain a farming industry worth another $15 billion.

In one lab at Harvard, researchers are working to develop a robotic aid. Robert Wood, associate professor of electrical engineering at Harvard's School of Engineering and Applied Sciences, is the principal investigator on the RoboBees project. And yes, it's exactly as it sounds—miniature robots mimicking bee behavior. "We use bees as more of an inspiration for some of the computer science aspects," says Wood, "in particular thinking about bees as social insects, where the whole is greater than the sum of the parts."

Wood's team is using technology from his Microrobotics Lab, which achieved takeoff with a robotic fly in 2007, to build tiny bee bodies, complete with limbs for pollination and docking. When complete, their brains will be wired to perform complex algorithms without much processing power. "It brings up interesting challenges in how to program many robots that are working together but are individually dumb," says Wood.

Although the engineering challenges are Wood's main interest, the applications for the now three-and-a-half-year-old RoboBee project are vast—autonomous pollination, surveillance, mapping. Still, the days of RoboBees making their mechanical flight from flower to flower are far off. "I don't want to get too science-fiction–esque because anything like this is 20 years away," says Wood. "We're not trying to replace bees at all," he adds. "That'd be ludicrous."

Schmear Campaign

When it comes to snacks, other coffeehouses can take a tip from Fuel. Along with cookies, cupcakes and sandwiches, Brighton's airy corner store bests the usual Styrofoam muffins with something simpler and far more tempting: toast. A soft, thick slice of white or wheat is spread with pillowy ricotta, a drizzle of honey, plenty of crunch from pumpkin seeds and sea salt, and an invigorating hit of mint. Fresh, cheap and made to order, this bite will put a spring in your step even before the caffeine kicks in.

GRILL SKILLS

Summertime recipes and holiday eats

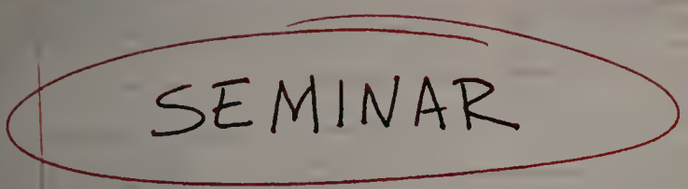
FIRST, THERE WAS WICKED Good Barbecue, in which Andy Husbands (of Tremont 647) and friends Chris Hart and Andrea Pyenson devised intricate recipes for killer grillers. The new sequel, Wicked Good Burgers, is just as well done, and a little simpler. Sure, there are recipes with numerous components—the vegan beet burger has 18 ingredients, not counting its accompanying tomato-ginger ketchup—but this is a book the home cook can use with relish.

Included are the Schlow Burger, famously created by chef Michael Schlow at Radius; the "$100 Burger," a paean to overkill combining wagyu beef, foie gras, truffles and lobster tails; and patties spotlighting duck, brisket and even goat. You'll find advice for leftovers (bacon-cheeseburger soup), tips on using a smoker and how to make Flour's hamburger buns. One recipe that didn't make the cut: the sausage-and-pancake burger. There's always book three.



EXECUTIVE PASTRY CHEF LAUREN Kroesser, who runs the bread program at Island Creek Oyster Bar and the Hotel Commonwealth properties, plans to bake up a variety of matzohs for Passover. Creative flavors such as confit garlic, clove and honey, thyme and sea salt, and Sriracha will mark the holiday.

DEPASQUALE VENTURES, THE FOLKS behind Bricco, Umbria Prime, Mare Oyster Bar and more, plans to open Quattro Grill, complete with a selection of rotisserie meats, any day now.

SEASON 14

SILVER LININGS

Retro is raging, and the Glynn Hospitality Group (Clerys, Granary Tavern, Dillon's) has caught on. March 9 saw the opening of Sterling's, the group's latest venture, in the heart of the Financial District. Glynn Group operations manager Vinny Polcari says they're hoping to draw on the area's business crowd—and maybe reintroduce that three-martini lunch.

"It really will be the tale of two restaurants," Polcari says, referencing the 170-seat patio space that pours out around 60 State St. Inside the building "swank" is a word you'll hear often. The walls of the '60s-themed restaurant are lined with treated tiles—an allusion to the herringbone pattern popular in that era—that stretch 20-feet-high to meet silver panels across the chandeliered ceiling.

The menu, too, echoes decades past, when everyone was a Francophile and Julia Child was a new face on the culinary scene. Executive chef Keenan R. Langois (Hamersley's, Lumière, Sorellina) says inspiration came from imagining midcentury soldiers coming back from war and longing for the food they'd experienced overseas. His take on the classic clams casino features cherrystone clams with garlic breadcrumbs and Old Bay–seasoned butter topped with thick bacon, while his sea scallops are served on a bed of chive risotto, drizzled with lemon butter and topped with thinly sliced spiced carrots.

There's personal inspiration here as well, however less obvious. Any menu he writes, says Langois, reflects his own past—connections to old girlfriends, his grandmother or something he once ate while driving across the country. "I always put a lot of personality into it," he says. "There's definitely something in there."

To complement the classics, the bar program from 14-year industry veteran Luis Luna features iconic midcentury drinks alongside local brews and a selection of wines. Though they're opening with traditional drinks, says Polcari, eventually the cocktail menu will reflect a "then-and-now" feel, introducing house-made bitters and the like. For now, it's tried-and-true Harvey Wallbangers, stingers, martinis, Manhattans, Trader Vic's–style Mai Tais and a little something called the Ginger Grant—vodka, ginger liquor, simple syrup, fresh lemon juice and ginger ale.

HANNAH LOTT-SCHWARTZ

RAY OF LIGHT

Newton native and Girls star Alex Karpovsky stars in two films, Rubberneck and Red Flag, now in theaters and on Video on Demand.

You write, direct and act in your own movies. Is it hard for you to give up control on* Girls?
It's a really welcome relief and change of pace. There's so much stress that you have to negotiate with when you're writing and directing and acting in your own stuff, and I really welcome the opportunity to just focus on one thing. And at the end of the day, I can have a beer and unwind with my cast mates.

Why is* Rubberneck *set in Boston?
I grew up in Newton—and the person I made the movie with, Garth Donovan, grew up in Needham. Once we started to really brainstorm story lines, we felt that, from a production point of view, we could really pool our resources most effectively in Boston and get the most bang for our buck.

How do you feel about* Girls *so heavily revolving around New York City?
New York's my home now, and it's where I feel most comfortable. I live in the neighborhood in New York where Girls is set and where Girls is shot. So I feel like Girls is sort of an extension of the world that I've come to know, and Boston's more of a place that's associated with my childhood and my past.

If Ray were real, do you think you guys would get along?
I could put up with Ray in short doses. I really like Ray's intellect, his wit, his sharp sense of humor. I appreciat his conviction, his nonconformity and his independence. And I'd really like to hear his views on politics and music, the fate of Latin American studies in today' academia, death [and] anxieties. But I don't really kno if I'd be able to see him more than once a week.

Ray's prized possession is a signed portrait of Andy Kaufman. Was he a big influence on you?
It was originally written to be another celebrity, but Lena [Dunham] changed it at the last minute to Andy Kaufman because she knows that he was a huge influence when I doing stand-up comedy in New York in my early 20s. And I do have a framed, autographed headshot of Andy Kaufman. It was given to me, of all people, by Lena's mother, Laurie Simmons, who gre up with him on Long Island.

Was that the one that was used in the show?
No, it was a different one. I'd never let other people touch my prized possession.

Vision Quest

Bigger is better—at least when it comes to your brows. Just look at Camilla Belle, Lily Collins and Jennifer Connelly. These leading ladies' natural-looking, full eyebrows refine their style. So put down the wax strips and step away from the eyebrow pencil, says Sarah Ferolito, brow expert at Pini Swissa Salon. She wants to help you create your own look, and have you raising eyebrows around town.

EMILY TANNENBAUM

Arch Support

The key to your arch is to keep it at the ¾ mark on your brow. An arch too centered creates a rounded, unflattering furrow, while a brow too flat lends a heavy look. Hairs on top of the brow tend to grow downward, so shaping can be tricky—pluck one that seems out of place, and you could end up with an awkward bald patch. Instead, carefully trim the fly-aways to maintain a full, thick look.

Axe the Wax

Natural brows come to those who tweeze, says Ferolito. Waxing creates sharper, less organic lines, and can easily make a brow look overmanicured. Tweezing, however, gives you complete control. "You want to enhance what you have and draw attention to your eyes," says Ferolito. Tearing up just comes with the territory, so take a deep breath and pluck.

Full Force

When it comes to filling in the blanks, thick pencils are out. Allow your brows to breathe, and use an eyebrow powder or eye shadow, going one shade lighter than your hair color. Start at the arch and swiftly stroke down to the end, and then use what's left for the thickest part of the brow.

PRESERVATION EFFORT

You know Passover is right around the corner when jam makers are canning flavors like Seder Sweetness. The apple-based conserve, made by Arlington-based Doves and Figs, is a take on the traditional charoset condiment. Instead of simply chopping up the elements as a relish, proprietor and longtime jammer Robin Cohen suspends the diced fruit and walnuts in a glassy reduction of honey and wine. The result is fruity and sweet—good on a cheese plate or a matzoh snack. With more flavors like Spring, Cape Escape and Falling Leaves, Cohen has a spread for every season.

Impersonals SPILL ZONE

TO THE STUMBLING WOMAN WHO SPILLED A $15 COCKTAIL ON ME WHILE WAITING IN LINE FOR THE RESTROOM: Had I done that to you, I would've at the very least issued an apology and offered to replace your drink. Seeing that you did neither of those things, I neglected to tell you about the toilet paper streaming from your heel. I hope you enjoyed the rest of your evening.

A karma believer

To the Starbucks barista on Boylston Street: You don't know how happy it makes me that you know my daily order. Not having to whisper "soy nonfat double latte" every morning saves me energy that I don't have before consuming a caffeinated beverage. Thank you for making the start of my day a little bit easier. An appreciative coffee drinker

To the lady who called the service atrocious: You are atrocious. You smelled fresh blood when you saw someone training, and you took advantage of it. Everything was fine, and yet you sent your food back and said your drinks took too long. It's funny that you threaten to never come back to the restaurant because no one wants you back. Just because you're a miserable person doesn't mean you have to take it out on the waitstaff.

Disgruntled server

To the handsome blond from Thinking Cup: There might as well have been a string quartet playing in the background when I caught your eye while waiting in line for my daily cup o' joe. And to think a quick, flirtatious smile got you to pay for my coffee. But alas, I've yet to be graced with another chance encounter—despite my efforts to be at the same place, same time every morning. Where'd you go, Romeo? Forlorn Julie

To the man outside Common Ground last Friday night: I got out of work late and was parking my car. I had pulled a U-turn on Harvard Ave. to get to my spot and misjudged the turn, so I hit the curb. When I got out, you stared at me and asked if I had been drinking. When I asked what you were talking about, you said you heard a bottle fall out of my car. I told you it was the sound of my tire on the curb. Just because I'm out in Allston at 2 am doesn't mean I've been drinking. Some of us work nights, and you don't have to ruin mine by asking me stupid question

IN BALANCE

NAME: Docksider

PRICE: $12

INVENTOR: City Landing general manager Gary Hermanson

CONCEIT: "It's a 21st-century, Boston-style Manhattan," says Hermanson. "We wanted to make it approachable. We didn't want just a brown booze drink." The idea is urbane glamour without the glint of threat.

INGREDIENTS: Berkshire Distillers New England Corn Whiskey, Cherry Heering, honey syrup, fresh lemon juice, Bittermens Boston Bittahs.

APPROACHABILITY: A Manhattan has bite, but this version is lying on its back with its paws up, ready for a belly rub.

TASTE: This is the definition of a balanced cocktail. The corn whiskey is already a gentle liquor, and filtered through honey, lemon and cherry, it loses most of its heat. An earthy note from the honey grounds the drink from becoming too sweet, while the bitters lend it an herbal finish. "It's fan-friendly, without being cookie-cutter," says Hermanson.

PAIR IT WITH: Caesar salad or black-trumpet-mushroom–dusted beef tenderloin. Something "classic, and a bit manly."

IDEOLOGY: City Landing's beverage program is oriented at being familiar but not recognizable. "It isn't full of muddling and bitters," says Hermanson. Hence cocktails like a gin fizz enlivened by raspberry.

ANDREW RIMAS

Season's Greetings

PETAL PUSHERS

Every spring, as the last of the snow banks melt away, a sea of flowers emerges, replacing our drab, winter-weary city with a Kodak-worthy landscape. While the sight may feel magical, the blooms' appearance is no Houdini act. Behind the curtain is Boston's Parks and Recreation Department. "There's actually a master plan, as much as the government is criticized," jokes Jacquelyn Goddard, director of external affairs and communications.

Each year, horticulturist Tom Williams leads the transformation with his selection of blooms after considering the various locations, growth conditions and the existing landscape. Volunteer groups and department staff spring into action in autumn to help plant the bulbs around the city. Those businesses and nonprofits that have received grant money from Mayor Menino's Beautify Boston project, which has already doled out $286,000 for proposals this year, also dig into the dirt, transforming our public spaces into places where we want to stop and smell the roses. More than 100,000 bulbs have been planted over the past two years, and in 2013, everything is coming up daffodils (and tulips, scilla, hyacinth, muscari and anthemis). Now if only we'd get the warm weather to put the petal to the metal.

R2 DEEP CLEAN

Like filing taxes, spring-cleaning is a necessary evil. But technology may offer a way out of at least one of your chores. We tested four robotic cleaners (two for carpets and two for hard surfaces), submitting them to a series of rigorous trials involving sugar packets and obstacle courses of chairs and wires. Let's find out which one sucks the most.

MADELINE COLEMAN

ROBOT ROOMBA 780 Equipped with a brain" and a suspension that makes rolling a breeze, this bad boy is as thorough as Mary Poppins—and as musical, with its melodic start up. With a touchpad that allows you to program regular intervals, this vacuum is the street cleaner to your hallways.

- Clears spilled sugar in two passes; smart enough not to try to suck up an electrical cord
- Struggles with tight corners

$600 at irobot.com

NEATO XV-21 The most aesthetically retro of the robots, this vacuum includes a bristled-brush that spans its belly to sweep and suck simultaneously. Before this little number gets to work, it scans and maps the room then plans a pattern of overlapping lines across the floor.

+ Cleans up a startling amount of hair
- Very loud; easily distracted by chair legs; struggles to find its dock

$430 at neatorobotics.com

IROBOT SCOOBA 390 This floor-washer inhales its own dirty water, guaranteeing to eliminate up to 98 percent of bacteria, rather than just pushing it around. The Scooba preps, washes, scrubs and squeegees the floor, washing up to 425 square feet on one tank.

+ Fluid can be replaced with vinegar for holistic cleaning
- Reading the user manual is a must
- So loud it may frighten the cat (but, then again, what won't?)

$500 at irobot.com

IROBOT MINT+ The smallest of our lineup, the Mint uses microfiber cleaning cloths to sweep and mop. It comes with a navigation system that helps the vacuum stay on track, and its compact size and shape make it ideal for apartments with tight corners.

+ Tidies up to 2,000 square feet on one battery charge
- Additional accessories require actual effort on consumers' part

VET SET

A novel about hospital drama of the animal kind

CYRUS, A VETERINARY pathologist, leaves his Vermont hometown and assumes his mother's last name, rejecting his vet father. His dad adores animals and is worshipped by their owners, but he ignores his two-legged son. After his parents' death, Cyrus returns to Bedside Manor, his father's crumbling practice, even though his own license has been revoked. Cyrus is immediately swept into the dramas and traumas of the business, and into his father's irritating local deification.

Doris, the heavy-smoking receptionist, rubs his nose in that legacy. But Cyrus' modest, unassuming curiosity begins to connect with the townsfolk. One angry man tries to get him to put his stepdaughter's dog to sleep as she tearfully posters the town. (Cyrus is hiding said pooch.) Another couple's dog mysteriously vomits underwear; the red boxers, however, are not the husband's. Cyrus calms the situation tactfully, making the wife grateful, and, indeed, generous to the clinic.

The Patron Saint of Lost Dogs
By Nick Trout

Trout works at Angell Memorial Animal Hospital in Jamaica Plain.

A reluctant loner, Cyrus meets Amy while dramatically saving her father's sick dog. Alongside Cyrus' endlessly entertaining vet-adventures is the well-done way Trout shows the bitterly rejected son slowly, resistantly, coming to see his father in a better light. Cyrus learns to understand how, unbeknownst to him, the old man protected and admired his son. ✖✖✖

THIS GOOD EARTH

Sonoma County has great wine, but that's just for starters.

THROUGH THE GRAPEVINE The rolling hills of Sonoma's wine country

WINTER DAYBREAK IN the Dry Creek Valley is proof that God smiles on the Sonoma County tourism board. It begins in silver, as threads of mist melt from the vineyards and the olive trees, then it warms into an Italianate glow as the long green hills fill with a painterly light. This is a landscape pointedly modeled on Tuscany, except with cleaner bathrooms and better service. What's truly impressive, though, is that a half-hour drive south plants you under the numinous gloom of the redwoods, and another short hop lands you on a hurtling shoreline as stark as the coasts of Patagonia, of County Clare, of Thule. But, of course, you've come to Sonoma for the wine.

The quiet town of Healdsburg is a good place to anchor your visit. Its most refined property is Madrona Manor, a magnificent Victorian home with eight acres of primped flowers, vegetable patches and evergreen trees. A long driveway slopes up past the gate to a verandah with a panorama of the velvet quilt of the Dry Creek Valley. The main house sports guest rooms in the style of a grand country inn, but for seclusion request a suite in the outlying "Schoolhouse." These are larger and spangled with the contents of Northern California's more exclusive antique stores. What th suites lack in technology (there's no television), they compensate with enormous sunken bathtubs, porches overlooking the woods ar charm. Try to make a reservation Madrona Manor's Michelin-starred restaurant, or, if you're le ambitious, just enjoy a house-made breakfast of fresh brioche and frittata by one of the fireplac

But, of course, you've come to Sonoma for the wine. The most enjoyable way to sample a smatt ing of the valley's wineries (there are more tha 70) is by bicycle. Book a tour with Getaway Adventures and ask for Tommy Thompson, a gregarious native Californian who enlivens the ride with stories of diving with whales and hunting wild boar. Make sure to visit Bella Vineyard for its impressive wine cave and the Family Wineries Tasting Room, where you can sample bottles from a half dozen producers in a single stop. The town of Healdsburg itself sports scores of tasting rooms; check out Selby for top-rated vintages from a female winemaker, or Long Board for its oddball surf theme. End your tour at Willi's Seafood & Raw Bar, a stylish hotspot in which you can revisit some of the valley's zinfandels accompanied by local Dungeness crab and creamy, Kumamoto oysters. Sitting at the bar with a glass of Matanzas Creek and a dish of butterfish with miso and exotic mushrooms is a pleasure that surpasses the material. It's got to be healthy for the soul.

Route 116 winds south of Healdsburg, past more gracious vineyards and into the jungly green of the Russian River Valley. The shadows here are longer and the air more gravid, with a Cretaceous silence and humidity under the redwoods. Pay homage to the titans at the Armstrong Redwoods State Reserve, where some of the trees date to the reign of Charlemagne. Staring up at the impossible canopy, a human being feels reverence, humility and a strong distaste for chainsaws.

Another 20 minutes west, the forest melts into plush, open hillsides studded with Holstein-Friesians before plunging into the histrionics of the Sonoma Coast. Giddy bluffs, pillars of sandstone, the leviathan roil of the Pacific—the Russian River's vegetable gigantism is matched here by a seascape from Neptune. Give your camera a workout at the many scenic overlooks before winding into Bodega Bay, a fishing village that made the successful shift to expensive waterfront real estate. Alfred Hitchcock filmed The Birds here, and you can capture a whiff of avian dominance at the Bodega Bay Lodge, a luxury hotel and spa perched next to a bird sanctuary. Sumptuous but muted rooms overlook a coastline unspoiled by anything more offensive than a cormorant. Along with the granite vanities and Bose music systems, the management provides binoculars for watching the fauna from your private balcony (to emphasize the point, the hotel restaurant is even called the Duck Club). At turnset, with the fireplace lit, the serenity is as enveloping as the down comforters.

SHELLBOUND Nearly everything's delicious, especially the orecchiette cacio e pepe and tiny clams in brodetto.

THERE'S SOMETHING mystical about Italian cuisine. As if by alchemy, simple ingredients—flour, water, eggs—are transformed into dozens of shapes and textures, becoming the basis of a cooking tradition that's masterful at conjuring memories and emotions. This interplay between modest materials and transcendence is at work in E. Michael Pagliarini's new restaurant, Giulia, his first after nearly a dozen years working at Via Matta and Chicago's Alinea.

The cozy 70-seat restaurant, located in the space formerly inhabited by Rafiki Bistro, retains much of the look of the former tenant, with a bar along one wall and tables and booths arranged on an elevated platform along the other. The big difference is the pasta table facing the open kitchen. By day, the reclaimed oak serves as a work surface for hand-rolling pastas. At night, it's a communal table for walk-ins, larger groups and customers ordering the tasting menu. The table's dual utility reflects the streamlined approach of Pagliarini's food: Nothing's for show. Everything has a purpose, and that purpose is to be delicious.

Start with the warm semolina cakes ($5) on the sfitzi menu, two silver dollar–sized rounds, thick as diver scallops, seared and topped with a slice of melting lardo. A cross between a fluffy omelet and baked polenta, the cakes had an eggy sweetness that melded with the pork fat. Also subtly sweet, the carne cruda ($11) was a mound of roughly diced rib-eye tartare tossed with a light vinaigrette. It too on different savory dimensions when alternately mixed with pickled, roasted and fresh allium. Tiny clams in brodetto ($16) married sea and land with a bowl of succulent shellfish adorned with chickpeas and crisped pancetta.

While nearly impossible to order a poorly executed dish, the standouts were the pastas, especially the pappardelle with wild boar ($21). Pagliarini's broad flat noodles included two types of flour and were ethereally soft yet sturdy enough fo the rustic sauce of boar, black trumpet mushrooms and juniper. The orecchiette cacio e pepe ($14), a Roman dish with only three ingredients—pasta, cheese and ground pepper—was a revelation, the mini shells the perfect vehicle for the creamy sauce carrying the bite of black pepper. The only pasta dish that didn't quite succeed was the ravioli ($19). Stuffed with veal breast and sweetbreads, the filling was bland, easily overwhelmed by the assertive flavors of Swiss chard and tomato sugo.

BOWLED OVER Pistachio gelato in its glory

B.N.'s Picks

Semolina cakes

Tiny clams

Orecchiette cacio e pepe

Pistachio gelato

The best way to experience Giulia is to order the tasting menu ($65, five courses; $35, wine pairings), a mix of specials and regular dishes. On a recent night, Pagliarini sent out an appetizer of bay scallops and charred head-on Maine shrimp, the seafood simply dressed with a refreshing vinaigrette of diced cucumber and orange zest. The sweet scallops and shrimp paired well with a Piedmont nascetta ($73 per bottle), one of the excellent Italian varietals from the small-batch artisanal wine list overseen by beverage manager Megan Cormier.

Desserts were equally strong, with the pistachio gelato ($6) spooned over preserved cherries in excellent finish to a rich, heady meal. Service is warm and friendly, as befitting the mom-and-pop nature of the restaurant. (Pagliarini's wife, Pamela Ralston, is co-owner/events manager; she also presses the colorful table runners nightly.)

It's hard not to be charmed by Giulia, named after the famous Roman street where Pagliarini and his wife had the epiphany to open their business. It's the kind of labor of love that translates to the philosophy of the food, a testament to a cuisine elevated by the skillful handling of ingredients. Make reservations now. In six months, it'll be difficult to get a space at the pasta table. ✖✖✖

ASK CHERYL

Q: WHAT SHOULD I LOOK FOR IN A FACIAL MOISTURIZER?

A: In the winter our skin needs more hydration than usual. It's best to use a moisturizer that is fragrance–free, as fragrance can be drying and can cause more sensitivity in cold weather. My favorite ingredients in our SkinHealth products to add hydration in the winter are hyaluronic acid, squalane and green tea.

Hyaluronic acid is a natural substance that has the ability to hold up to 1,000 times its molecular weight in water, so it is effective at maintaining proper moisturization. Squalane is a natural organic lipid that hydrates and is readily absorbed by the skin. Green tea will soothe the skin reduce inflammation that causes ruddiness in our cheeks and around our nose from wind and cold.

THINKING POSITIVE

Starring Gael García Bernal, Alfredo Castro, Antonia Zegers and Marcial Tagle. Based on the play El Plebiscito by Antonio Skármeta. Screenplay by Pedro Peirano. Directed by Pablo Larraín. At Kendall Square Cinema.

THINGS WEREN'T GOING so great for dictators circa 1988. While the CIA had done a nifty job installing Augusto Pinochet in Chile back in 1973, international pressure was building against him. Even though every despot likes to pretend they were voted in by the people, Pinochet tried to salvage some sort of credibility in the world community by holding a plebiscite. Basically, it was a referendum where Chileans could vote "Yes" if they wanted him to stick around, or "No" if they were commie layabouts who enjoyed unemployment. He even gave the opposition 15 minutes of free television time every night to air their case, because if the government is counting the votes, why not?

Based on a play by Antonio Skármeta, Pablo Larraín's No is a caustic, often brutally funny tale of democracy in action. Mexican heartthrob Gael García Bernal stars as René Saavedra, a hotshot advertising whiz brought in by a dysfunctional gang of dissidents to help engineer the No campaign. He's not presented as a man of high ideals. While Saavedra's estranged wife (Antonia Zegers) is a firebrand activist (whom we first meet while she's taking a beating from Pinochet's police), he's still a go-along, get-along kind of guy who just returned from Mexico, far away from his homeland strife. Politics are everywhere, but Saavedra is more interested in cashing sizable paychecks, playing games with his toddler son and gazing in wonderment at his new microwave oven.

A lesser movie would serve this story as a conversion narrative, in which the avaricious advertising exec learns a thing or two about the struggles of the common man and helps overthrow the rotten government. No is far more interesting. Larraín keeps his hero at arm's length, capitalizing on Bernal's vaguely vacant stare by offering his hero a rare degree of privacy. We never get much of a clue as to what makes this guy tick.

But we do know that he loves a challenge, and there's probably nothing more difficult than wrangling 13 left-wing political parties toward one coherent message that can be presented in bite-sized, TV-friendly chunks. Saavedra sells democracy as a product like any other. While his betters would rather use the free airtime to showcase Pinochet's atrocities, he instead focuses on rainbows, jingles and silly comedy sketches. After 15 years living under the boot of a brutal dictatorship, the people don't need to be reminded of how much they've lost—they want sunshine and laughter. No's most cutting gag is just how much Saavedra's political ads resemble his recent campaign for diet cola. And the punch line is that they work.

No was an Oscar nominee for best foreign language film, and while I usually don't put much stock in arbitrary honors, the picture at least found itself in like-minded company. As with Lincoln, this is a movie about pragmatism, where the ends justify the means, and sometimes you have to sacrifice your ideals and fudge the rules a bit for the greater good (since people casting votes are generally stupid).

Larraín photographed No on some ancient, painstakingly restored, period-specific U-matic video cameras. While the smeary, old-school cable-TV picture quality takes getting used to, it enables him to seamlessly integrate old news footage into the narrative amplifying the screenplay's philosophical concerns about the blurred lines between fabricated fantasies and cold reality.

The antiquated style allows for my favorite flourish, in which several Chilean celebrities appear as themselves, reenacting their contributions to the No campaign. All the while, on Saavedra's TV studio monitors we're seeing the real ads from 1988. It's a time-bending moment with a gulf of 25 years on either side of the scene.

I'm sure it's awfully tempting to laugh at No's cheesy fashions and awkward, totally '80s signposts. (Saavedra might be the first movie character to commute via skateboard since Marty McFly in Back to the Future.) But as dated and amusing as all these vapid jingles, logos and empty slogans seem, they're not a far cry from Shepard Fairey's famous Obama poster and all that hope-and-change business I still fall for.

No isn't a picture about believing in a leader or a platform. It's about believing in brand. ✖✖✖

BUILDING AN ARC

Patrick Watson illuminates dreamy art-pop with "thought and simplicity."

Patrick Watson
plays the Sinclair on March 28.

THE EVOCATIVE CHAMBER-pop of Patrick Watson doesn't seem like the right fit for a tour with the Godfather of Soul. But singer/pianist Watson credits an early opportunity to open for James Brown with teaching his Montreal band to have fun onstage rather than trying to prove themselves.

"We were such a young band, and it was like being sent to the wolves," says Watson, 33, recalling that early tour. In the decade since, he and his bandmates have become known for using odd sound accessories. "We built megaphone suits with speakers on our backs to walk into the audience and all sorts of weird stuff through the years, but I think all that stemmed from that tour where we got our butts kicked."

Sure, there's added entertainment value to making music by striking pots, bottles and even bicycle spokes to cinematic effect, particularly on the 2009 album, Wooden Arms, inspired by cartoon composer Carl Stalling. The band Patrick Watson—composed of guitarist Simon Angell, bassist Mishka Stein and drummer Robbie Kuster, as well as its namesake leader—still laces its arrangements with marimba, horns and strings. Yet the quartet largely toned down the ornamentation for its fourth album, Adventures in Your Own Backyard, which was recorded on the group's home turf and released last fall.

The idea, Watson says, was to "just make what needs to be there, and let the songs do their job. That was a learning curve for us because all of us came from jazz or classical or backgrounds where there were a lot of colors put on."

His own musical journey began with his church choir and classical lessons, plus a teenage stint in a ska group, before he met his mates in a Vanier College ensemble class. "I didn't necessarily think I'd be in a band," Watson says. "I thought I'd be involved in doing more film scores or multimedia projects and be more of a composer than a band, and it accidentally weaved into where I'm at now."

In turn, his glorious voice—a tremulous falsetto that can evoke the spiritual musings of Jeff Buckley or Antony Hegarty—remains the most striking element in Patrick Watson's music, though the pianist says he never expected to become a pop singer. Then he heard the Icelandic vocalist Björk.

"I remember thinking, 'Oh, I could probably do something like that,' definitely being inspired by her for mixing things together," Watson says. "That was a huge turning point."

His group's first gig was in an old theater used for adult entertainment, performing the music they'd scored for a photo book. "About 400 people showed up because everyone wanted to see what it looked like inside, and they were too scared to go during the day," Watson says. "Nobody had any idea what they were even going to listen to, and they gave us this crazy wind."

Multimedia shows were too costly to maintain, but Patrick Watson still emphasizes lighting and visual design. "Lighting's huge in a big room, but it doesn't have to be crazy big," says the singer, whose group plays the Sinclair on March 28. "You just need a little thought and simplicity. Lighting the show really affects the mood of the audiences and how they're going to listen."

Patrick Watson has been opening shows by solely illuminating the dreamy, Debussy-influenced piano prelude of the band's new song "Lighthouse" with lights attached to the musicians' fingers. "It starts from scratch, and there's lots of room to build," he says. "It's like the antithesis of the Flaming Lips, [where] they give everything away in the first 10 seconds."

After the orchestral cabaret crescendos, the combo (augmented live by violinist Melanie Belair and trumpeter David Carbonneau) later strips down for an in-crowd serenade by Watson and Angell. "There's nothing more effective after you have a huge freak-out moment," the singer says. "I'd say the arc of our show is a buildup to the moment where it's just guitar and voice, for that to be the pinnacle." ✖✖✖

THE DIGITAL AGE

Promoting ideas, then and now

YEARS AGO, I WAS FLYING to a number of cities to do television, radio and print interviews with any media outlet my publisher could arm-twist into selling me. On this tour, I wore a leather mask of a bull, complete with horns and a ring through the nose. The costume was part of the promotion because it was a book about the stock market and written under the pseudonym Brutus. Brutus stuck Caesar, and I suppose I stuck the soft underbelly of Wall Street, an easy target. Selling is selling, and at that time you had to be a road warrior, showing up at 12 cities, talking from dawn 'til the wee hours. In L.A., I was on with Joey Bishop, one of Sinatra's Rat Pack. The straight man to Bishop? A young Regis Philbin. In Washington, D.C., I wore the mask for a really young host, Maurey Povich, long before his tabloid talk shows. The tours were exhausting and exhilarating, too. And I learned a lot about the country seeing it face-to-face.

Today, promotion means more than a four-minute sound bite on some morning show in Cleveland. Increasingly, you can Skype interviews all over the country, saving money plus wear and tear for publishers and authors.

One of my partners told me about the TED talks. An information architect named Richard Saul Wurman thought it would be a great idea to bring together the top talents in three areas: technology, entertainment and design (T.E.D.), and have them discuss their fields and lives in brief 18-minute presentations, inviting the public to participate. My partner attended an early session and was amazed that he could mingle with people like Bill Gates, Herbie Hancock, and Penn and Teller. The TED concept has expanded, and franchises, or TEDx's, have emerged in many cities. Last year in Boston, the charismatic young entrepreneur John Werner started TEDx Beacon Street. He invited me to be one of the speakers. Curious and excited, I jumped aboard.

Slightly hungover and sleepy on a Sunday morning, I drove to Brookline for my introduction to TEDx culture. The toothpicks holding up my eyelids popped out when I saw hundreds of cars lined up for the programs. I walked into the Lincoln School and was surrounded by, it seemed, dozens of volunteers, all seemingly thrilled to escort me to my launch site. Within five minutes, I was introduced to Obama's number-two speechwriter, the cofounder of Boston Scientific, one of the leading industrial designers in the country and a young robotics genius from MIT. I learned more in 20 minutes than I had in the previous six months. Onstage, I looked out at the audience, ages 18 to 80, and saw a crowd who loved to learn. If that sounds like you, each presentation is professionally filmed and edited and posted on YouTube. Check it out: youtube.com/watch?v=buyPLiJe1Tc.

My biggest takeaway from the TED talks was regarding the entrepreneurial spirit in America. I've found it's alive and well, despite all the headlines trumpeting bad news. Everyone I met had a dream for the future that was both progressive and optimistic, if not for the country, definitely for themselves.

I met Lisa Pierpont at the TEDx sessions. She was one of the volunteers and one of those people who gives you faith. She'd been a producer at Chronicle for more than 10 years, and before the term "viral" took on such a positive spin, she jumped out of her comfort zone and created something of her own. She started Boldfacers, a social-networking production house, creating projects for clients and conducting interviews with Bostonians who might educate and perhaps even inspire you.

It's tough to give up a certain spotlight and job you love to make the leap into a brave new world, but the lure of having something of our own, something built from scratch, is irresistible to Americans. We're restless and impatient with the status quo, especially if it's not working in our favor. And it's this resilience, the itch to change, that makes us unique.

Boldfacers' studio is in the Seaport. It's a slick workroom in which Pierpont does the interviews and her cameraman does the video. They promote my book and package it up. It's a great example of using technology for plugging an image, especially your own.

As always, the future belongs to the progressive and optimistic. As always, the future belongs to entrepreneurs. ✖✖✖

LET THE CONVERSATION BEGIN NOW.

Q I have been reluctant to call a care manager because I am concerned about the cost. Can you tell me a little more about the value of your services?

A Hiring a care manager in many situations saves you time and money!

It just so happens that what might take several months of your time, takes 2 hours of mine. True case scenario. When you are accustomed to moving within systems that involve health, health insurance, healthcare, end of life care we move through these systems with minimal effort for the most part. Helping you decide which health insurance is most appropriate for you may save you money during the benefit year.

Of course, no one has a crystal ball and no one can predict the unknown. What we can do is assess your situation and work to address your health care needs.

GET REAL

Here's the next wave of Boston reality shows.

IF YOU LIVE IN SOUTH BOSTON, you're probably not a fan of A&E's Southie Rules reality show. Critics and residents alike complain that the scenarios depicted on the show are contrived and don't represent real life in the neighborhood. Well, if A&E says that people in Southie rent lobster boats by bartering ham, who am I to sit here and say it doesn't happen? Hey, I'm an opportunist, so the mere existence of Southie Rules is a sign that I need to start brainstorming spin-offs for other districts. As a city, it's time we start mythologizing some of our non–Good Will Hunting neighborhoods. I've got some ideas.

South of the Border: This South End show features Mike and Steve, a pair of longtime South Enders determined to succeed in the tough world of artisan dog treats. Watch as they argue and throw dough at each other in their Washington Street loft. You'll love their sassy neighbor Glenda, who tells fortunes and is an old man.

The Wild West: Set in Boston's West End, watch our affable protagonist, Ricky McTickets, ply his trade as the streets teem with excitement in the hours leading up to the Bruins game. Then watch the streets empty and become a scary, abandoned Scooby-Doo ghost town two hours after the game is finished. Where did McTickets go? Does anybody live here? Why does that city building look like David Bowie's castle from Labyrinth?

Quincy Bay Watch: Manning the lifeguard chair at Wollaston Beach is a sexy job, but someone's gotta do it. And that someone is Jimmy Houser. When the big waves roll into Wolly Beach, he'll be ready to put down his clam bellies, extinguish his cigarette and yell, "Hey, get outta the watah! There's too much bacterier today 'cause they're flushing the pipes ovah at Nu Island!" Luckily, there are never any big waves, and beachgoers seem to recognize that Jimmy isn't a real lifeguard, but just a guy in red shorts who brought a really tall beach chair in the back of his El Camino.

Beacon Hillions: What happens when five fresh-out-of-college roommates live in a 700-square-foot second-floor apartment with an investment banker upstairs and a 100-year-old lady below? Here's one social experiment you won't want to miss. Which neighbor will call the cops this weekend? Who got drunk and spent $40 buying frozen alligator steaks at Savenor's? Will the landlady ever make an appearance, or just remain a mysterious voice on the phone who suggests trying to fix the toilet yourself?

Totally Crossed Out: Set in Downtown Crossing, a team of madcap developers constantly roll out grandiose plans for 200-story towers, but then just end up installing a couple of new window displays at Foot Locker.

Staying Bay: We follow two residents of Bay Village, Megan and Victor, as they strive, day in and day out, to explain to their friends and family where Bay Village is exactly. Some people don't even believe it's a real place. Will they give up and just say they live a few blocks off Newbury Street? In the first episode, they lobby the city to simplify their parking stickers, which currently read, "That place, you know, it's kinda by the Pike, like, near Chinatown but also right by the Theater District and Back Bay and the South End."

Hall of Mirrors: This show documents the lives of two savvy, longtime Boston residents, Steph and Ted, as they act like they're too cool to go out in Faneuil Hall but do exactly that at least one night a week. "Man, that place is such a tourist trap," says Steph while putting on the jacket that she'll eventually forget at Ned Devine's. "Yeah, totally amateur hour," says Ted, who'll later join a fun bar crawl and end up singing karaoke at the Bell in Hand.

Financial District Weekend: Hosted by Les Stroud, star of Survivorman, Financial District Weekend tracks Stroud's forays deep into the strange, haunting world of the Financial District on weekends. Did you know that on Saturdays, a tribe of sewer people emerge from beneath the streets and hunt coyotes right there in Post Office Square? Nobody knew because nobody had ever been there on a Saturday. 'Til now.

True North: This show would've followed three generations of the same family of North End restaurateurs, but nobody could find anywhere to park. ×××

"I'm a believer in not using the theater as a therapy session."

Soroff On DANIEL BEATY

AWARD-WINNING ACTOR, WRITER, SINGER, COMPOSER DANIEL Beaty, 37, is currently appearing in his one-man play, Emergency, in which he plays dozens of different characters. Since graduating from Yale and studying at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco, he's performed with artists as varied as Ossie Davis, Mos Def, Deepak Chopra and Phylicia Rashad. Last year, his play Through the Night enjoyed an extended off-Broadway run and earned him Lucille Lortel, Drama Desk, Drama League and Outer Critics Circle award nominations. He received an Obie award in 2007. He has written a "spoken word ballet," Far But Close, that'll premiere this season with the Dance Theater of Harlem. He's an artist in residence at Arts Emerson, a visiting professor at UMass-Amherst and an adjunct professor at Columbia University. His first children's book is slated to be released this year.

Jonathan Soroff: What do you do with all your awards?
Daniel Beaty: I keep a lot of them on my windowsill, but I bought a new home and there's an Obie sitting in a box somewhere in a closet.

Performer you most enjoyed working with?
I'd actually say Bill Cosby. He's just an absolute character, and a master of comedic timing and silliness in a way that's just really powerful.

Historical figure you'd most like to portray?
I'm working on it now. Paul Robeson.

What's a "spoken word ballet"?
[Laughs.] Well, I think this is actually a new form, and it's a poetic play that has been set to music and choreographed for dancers.

Biggest surprise about Emerson?
I was actually stunned by all of the gorgeous theaters. Really Broadway-caliber theaters. I had no idea that ArtsEmerson had those types of spaces.

Any desire to make the leap into film?
It's a dream of mine. Theater is so expensive for a lot of people, and I see these as stories for everybody. It's less expensive to buy a movie ticket than a theater ticket.

So it's the ability to make it more accessible?
Partly. I love the size and magnitude the theater has to offer, but I also love the subtlety and specificity that the camera can create. And I love that it lasts.

How do you feel about critics?
I've been very lucky and wonderfully reviewed most of the time, and I understand the role they play. But I think that critics are not writing for playwrights. They're writing for another audience. So I don't read them anymore. I keep a close circle of people whose opinions I value, rather than a critic who doesn't know me or might not understand what I'm trying to say.

Favorite venue?
I actually just got back from Omaha, Neb., where Warren Buffett's daughter, Susie, put me in a 2,000-seat theater to perform Emergency. Half the tickets were general admission, and half were underwritten for young people from underserved communities who wouldn't have been able to come otherwise. The beauty of that and the portrait of that audience was one of the most magical experiences of my life.

What do great actors have in common?
I'd say observation. The ability to listen to life, listen to the world.

What do great plays have in common?
A specificity of voice. A great play talks about something from a very strong perspective or point of view.

Does Boston strike you as a racist city?
I think Boston, like many cities in America, has unhealed issues regarding race. There's a level of conversation and healing that I don't think ever really happened and still percolates in communities throughout America.

Do you always wear red?
[Laughs.] Well, red is my favorite color. And then there's the fact that I'm very dark-skinned, and I was told as a child, "You're too dark to wear all those bright colors." When I learned to celebrate my uniqueness and the gift of my dark skin, I decided that bright colors accented it, and I bought all the red I could find.

What do you do before going on stage?
I warm up my body, physically and vocally. I listen to great music. And I have a ritual of generally eating something bland enough that it won't upset my stomach, like a grilled chicken sandwich on wheat toast with lettuce, tomato and mustard.

Favorite character you've created?
Probably Clarissa in Emergency. She's a sassy little black girl growing up in a housing project. She takes fairy tales and rewrites them according to her experience, so Goldilocks and the Three Bears becomes Kinkyhead and the Three Bears. Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs becomes Black Aisha and the Seven Shorties.

Does a lot of creativity come from pain?
It can. But it can also come from a range of other emotions, from rage to joy. I'm a believer in not using the theater as a therapy session or to work out your demons. But at the same time, telling the truth of experience using the tools of the theater can really be illuminating.

Person you most admire?
My mother. Y'know, there are people in public life or from history whom I admire, but it's not like I know them. I saw my mother day-to-day, her integrity, her commitment.

What's your worst character trait?
Probably that I'm a workaholic. Because I love my work so much, I'd work all the time to the detriment of myself and my relationships.

I think it's amazing. It's burgeoning. There are a lot of artistic leaders doing exciting, adventurous work, like Rob Orchard at Emerson, Diane Paulus at the A.R.T., Peter Dubois at the Huntington. It's a really beautiful, wonderful community. ✖✖✖

WHEN YOU need to reboot your enthusiasm...

See Betsyann Duval's Infinite Progression and Laurie Alpert's Milori Blue at the Bromfield Gallery.

If you've lived in Boston long enough, you may sometimes hit a wall where you just stop exploring. Arlington to Jamaica Plain can feel like traveling cross-country, and if getting to that new bistro requires taking both the T and a bus, screw it. To escape the rut and get some perspective, head to the South End's Bromfield Gallery, where Betsyann Duval's Infinite Progression and Laurie Alpert's Milori Blue will be on display through April 27. Duval's work is a study on scale: Can a moment that's been drawn within the purview of a Post-it be given more significance when reproduced on a larger canvas? And to what extent can it be reshaped until its meaning is lost?

Alpert's focus, likewise, is on transformation. She takes photographs of her studio floor and combs them through Photoshop, transforming them into polyester plate lithographs and polymer prints. Suffused with stains of Milori blue, these abstracts are brandished with inkblots reminiscent of the Rorschach test, opening them to interpretation. And because what we see has so much to do with our state of mind, you should be sure to keep yours open.

Betsyann Duval's Infinite Progression and Laurie Alpert's *Milori Blue
run April 3–27 | Free | Bromfield Gallery | 450 Harrison Ave., Boston | 617-451-3605 | bromfieldgallery.com

Go to Boston Ballet's Coppélia.

You used to be the duo that'd roll in for half-price appetizers at happy hour, the ones laughing in the back at hot yoga class. But recently, your friend has been working late instead of working out, replying to your e-mails, "I'll get back to you once things slow down!" (And it's looking like it won't happen.)

Help out. Invite him or her to wake up and smell the roses with Boston Ballet's Coppélia. Your overachieving pal may relate to the character of Franz, who chases a fantasy, but who's saved by the enterprising Swanilda—a woman of spirited determination. With music by Léo Delibes, the ballet soars: Woodwinds are lifted high on ladders of lively strings and by the triumphant blasts of trumpets and trombones. The performance also features more than 20 children from Boston Ballet School in an adorable demonstration of how dance can bring us to life.

Coppélia runs May 16–26 | $29–$137 | Boston Opera House | 539 Washington St., Boston | 617-695-6955 | bostonballet.org

See The Book of Mormon.

Since its gospel swept Broadway in 2011, The Book of Mormon has been awing sold-out audiences across the country. The winner of nine Tony awards, including best musical, and a Grammy for best musical theater album, its Boston stop is a big ticket. Written by South Park creators Trey Parker and Matt Stone, and Robert Lopez, who cocreated the smash-hit Avenue Q, it's just as profane and disquieting as reported (this isn't for kids). Yet for all its raunchy humor, it tackles weighty subjects like poverty, homophobia and AIDS in Africa, throwing them into high relief in a story that's shockingly virtuous (thou shalt not bear false witness against thine elephants in the room).

This isn't standard-issue theater. If you can score tickets, you'll laugh until you're blushing, mortified and beet-red in the face.

The Book of Mormon runs April 9–28 | $15–$175 | Boston Opera House | 539 Washington St., Boston | 800-982-2787 | boston.broadway.com

WHEN YOU want to be in the City of Light instead...

Check out Paris Combo.

You know exactly what you'll do when you get there: Buy a crusty baguette and a bottle of wine, throw a blanket down on the banks of the Seine and watch the city sparkle.

Except there's the matter of airfare. An alternative is to score a ticket to jazz quintet Paris Combo, which brings the thrumming heart of France to the Berklee Performance Center. Belle du Berry is their sultry, come-hither chanteuse, backed by Django-influenced guitarist Potzi, percussionist François Jeannin, trumpeter/pianist David Lewis and bassist Mano Razanajato. They're a bewitching ensemble full of fast tempos, blending rumba, flamenco, gypsy jazz, African drumming and American swing. Not to mention driving, dance-with-me rhythms and grooves.

Paris Combo

If there's such a thing as a language of love, Paris Combo speaks in tongues that'll you leave you downright enamored.

Paris Combo plays on May 3 | $28–$37 | Berklee Performance Center | 136 Mass. Ave., Boston | 617-747-2261 | berklee.edu

WHEN YOU'RE attempting to cast a spell...

Take the object of your interest to Anders Zorn: A European Artist Seduces America.

Get intimate at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum—a romantic world unto itself. Upon entering, you'll eye elegant arches and a courtyard abloom with flowers. And in the newly opened Hostetter Gallery, you're invited to admire the masterworks of artist Anders Zorn.

Known for his portraiture, Zorn painted bathing nudes, beautiful women in railroad cars and even a radiant Isabella Stewart Gardner, arms outstretched in a Venetian doorway. Their expressions are unblushing and candid, providing a perfect pretext to ask your date: Don't you think some people look better naked?

Alongside 24 of Zorn's paintings, the exhibit showcases his etchings, photographs and more than a dozen letters he sent to Gardner, his patron and friend. Fingers crossed that their bond inspires some whispered flirtation.

Anders Zorn: A European Artist Seduces America runs through May 13 | $15 | Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum | 280 The Fenway, Boston | 617-566-1401 | gardnermuseum.org

WHEN YOU'RE emerging from hibernation...

Rock out with Atlas Genius.

Between Sandy and Nemo, it seems like the world is all dark skies and snow drifts. Hence the appeal of Australian band Atlas Genius, whose music evokes balmier climes. Take the sunny harmony of a track like "Trojans," with its Pacific warmth, or "If So," from the group's new album, which combines mellowness with a charge that feels like driving with the top down along Highway 1. These are tunes ready-made for a summer playlist.

Consisting of brothers Keith and Michael Jeffery, and Darren Sell on the keyboard, Atlas Genius rose into popular consciousness after being spotted by the blog Neon Gold. This June, the trio will be coming to town, giving you a chance to rally your friends and quicken your pulse with a night at the Sinclair, which recently opened in Harvard Square (also note the excellent cocktails in the restaurant adjacent to its stage).

WHEN YOU'RE in the mood for a stiff drink...

Hear the Boston Pops perform Music From the Mad Men Era.

Whenever Mad Men's in season, how many of us gather with our friends, pour a glass of bourbon, and claim our space on the couch to travel back to 1960s Manhattan? We've followed Don Draper through the Cuban Missile Crisis and JFK's assassination, divorce, dozens of affairs and hundreds of cigarettes. And the soundtrack is the gravy. In season five, producers famously paid $250,000 for the license to play the Beatles' "Tomorrow Never Knows," while Gillian Hills' "Zou Bisou Bisou" was given new life on iTunes after Megan sang it on Don's birthday.

Just in time for the show's return on April 7, the Boston Pops perform Music From the Mad Men Era at Symphony Hall. Director of artistic planning Dennis Alves tells us that you'll hear hits like "Soul Bossa Nova" (aka the theme song from Austin Powers) and chart-toppers from crooners Vic Damone, Frank Sinatra and Bobby Darin that'll transport you to the bygone days of cigarettes and sexism. Keith Lockhart conducts, and special guest Steve Lippia croons with a voice as velvety as Sinatra's.

Music From the* Mad Men *Era will be performed May 21–22 and May 31–June 1 | $22–$105 | Symphony Hall | 301 Mass. Ave., Boston | 888-266-1200 | bso.org

WHEN YOU just want to be alone...

Take solace in Cinéphile Sundays at Wellesley College.

If your preferred therapy is time spent alone and in the dark, hit up Cinéphile Sundays at Wellesley College, with its current theme of "wandering lost souls." On March 31, the college screens Terrence Malick's The Tree of Life, a radiant story of innocence lost, which explores the beginnings of the universe and the meaning of it all. Then, on April 21, there's Alfonso Cuarón's riveting dystopian sci-fi flick Children of Men. Come May 5, check out Melancholia, Lars von Trier's apocalyptic doomsday flick. The script spawned from one of Trier's therapy sessions, wherein he was left to ruminate on the welcoming calmness one can feel when despondent.

It may not be a typical popcorn movie, but this isn't your everyday film series.

Cinéphile Sundays run through May 5 | Free | Collins Cinema at Wellesley College | 106 Central St., Wellesley | 781-283-2407 | wellesley.edu

WHEN YOU'VE listened to all your audiobooks...

Hear David Sedaris read at Symphony Hall.

David Sedaris' wry observations on dysfunction and accepted conventions have made him something of a national Everyman. Take the truth in lines like, "There's still the outside world to contend with, a world of backfiring cars and their human equivalents," from his last collection of essays, When You Are Engulfed in Flames.

His next book, his eighth, Let's Explore Diabetes With Owls, is out on April 23, so you can get a preview of it when he arrives here on tour. His delivery oscillates between deadpan and expressive, giving you little forewarning before he fires off a killer line. His new stories feature the usual miscellany of oddities, from encountering a kookaburra in the Australian bush to caressing the dead with a British taxidermist. Invite your book club for an evening of funny absurdities, both everyday and odd.

David Sedaris arrives on May 6 | $30–$60 | Symphony Hall | 301 Mass. Ave., Boston | 617-482-6661 | celebrityseries.org

Tour the Spring Open Studios in Fort Point

As Fort Point booms with upscale restaurants and yuppie condos, the artists who dwelled there for decades are hanging on by their fingernails. But they're still making an impact, largely thanks to FPAC, the Fort Point Arts Community. Since the nonprofit was founded in 1980, it's valiantly fought to preserve the livelihood of resident artists.

Come Mother's Day weekend, more than 75 studio doors open to the public during FPAC's Art Walk, when you can peer into private workshops and find unique treasures. Even though this event is held annually, its existence is remarkable in light of the neighborhood gentrification. A spectacular example of surviving against the odds, it's a fine life lesson for any couple on a springtime stroll: Have faith and stay inspired, and beautiful things will happen.

Art Walk, Spring Open Studios runs May 10–12 | Free | Fort Point, Boston | 617-423-4299 | fortpointarts.org

WHEN YOU'RE bristling for an argument...

See Rapture, Blister, Burn

Ever since Anne-Marie Slaughter's Atlantic exposé, "Why Women Still Can't Have It All" went to print last year, critics have squabbled over the definition of "it all," or called bulls on the concept. Stoking the argument is the Boston debut of Rapture, Blister, Burn from playwright Gina Gionfriddo and director Peter DuBois.

The play positions Catherine, a trailblazing career woman, opposite homemaker Gwen. Catherine's erudite mother, Alice, and headstrong 20-something Avery, are also thrown into the mix as two polestars of life experience. As the four women converge in a grad school class, they present their research on whose grass looks the greenest.

None of their life choices are labeled as "wrong," and each of their circumstances are examined with humor. There's a lot on the table—parenthood, marriage, advanced degrees, the ideal of a work-life balance—all duly mocked or championed as the play questions what fulfillment means, and what might happen if we were to swap shoes with someone we envy. Save a seat for a friend who's the orange to your apple, and carry on the conversation over post-theater cocktails.

Take them to see Pirates of Penzance at the A.R.T.

You've taken the out-of-towners to Fenway, Harvard Yard and the U.S.S. Constitution. They've seen Impressionist art and eaten buckets of chowder. They've heard honks from Duck Tours, from Public Garden swans, from Storrow Drive. Now it's time for someone else to do the entertaining.

Enter the American Repertory Theater's season closer, Gilbert and Sullivan's Pirates of Penzance.

Be sure to score promenade tickets with no fixed seating, leaving you free to wander and engage with the cast. As buccaneers, they sport sailor hats and swim shorts, and play a range of instruments from harmonicas to banjos. And as these merrymakers bring unbridled punch to "I Am the Very Model of a Modern Major-General," don't hold back from providing your own backup vocals.

Pirates of Penzance runs May 10–June 2 | $25–$65 | Loeb Drama Center | 64 Brattle St., Cambridge | 617-547-8300 | americanrepertorytheater.org

UNSUNG HEROES

ARTS ORGANIZATIONS CROWD THE BOSTON STAGE. HERE ARE A FEW THAT DESERVE A BRIGHTER SPOTLIGHT.

By Jonathan Soroff

WHEN IT COMES TO THE PERFORMING ARTS,

Bostonians are spoiled. A world-class orchestra playing in one of only three acoustically perfect concert halls in the world. An equally excellent ballet. Then there are the New England and Boston conservatories, the A.R.T. and the Huntington, free Shakespeare on the Common, the Celebrity Series and pre-Broadway runs at the Shubert, the Colonial, the Cutler Majestic...

WHEN IT COMES TO THEATER, MUSIC AND DANCE,

BUT SOMETIMES IT SEEMS LIKE THE SAME ARTS ORGANIZATIONS

steal all the thunder. And while we've sung the praises of smaller companies like the Gold Dust Orphans, Urbanity Dance and Guerilla Opera, there are lots we've overlooked.

Here, then, is a collection of stellar organizations that may have slipped under your radar.

1. COMPANY ONE

A theater company in residence at the Boston Center for the Arts, Company One came into being 15 years ago, when six Clark University grads went camping off the coast of Portland, Maine. Since then, it's delivered some of the city's most reliably wonderful performances, including the powerful Brother/Sister trilogy and a lost Tennessee Williams play staged in a room at the Ames Hotel. Its goal is to foster social change, build community, broaden arts participation and eliminate prejudice, sexism, homophobia, classism and other social divides. It's a lofty mission, but based on Company One's track record, it's the little theater company that could.

2. ARTSEMERSON'S FILM SERIES

Anyone who's been to Downtown Crossing has seen the way Emerson College has transformed several blocks of urban blight, but what they might not know is that within the Paramount Center is a screening room to rival any commercial movie house, showing films you won't find anywhere else. Earlier this month, an obscure Orson Welles movie and an early Guillermo del Toro horror flick were playing, as well as such family-friendly fare as A Bug's Life. The intriguing programming also included a simultaneous run of the 1950s sci-fi classic The Fly, starring Vincent Price, along with David Cronenberg's 1986 remake, starring Jeff Goldblum. It's nirvana for film buffs.

3. DISCOVERY ENSEMBLE

Founded by charismatic University of Cambridge grad Courtney Lewis (associate conductor of the Minnesota Orchestra and a Dudamel fellow with the L.A. Philharmonic), this chamber orchestra consists of young musicians who play seamlessly (in part because many of them studied together). With performances at Harvard's Sanders Theater and NEC's Jordan Hall, the orchestra has wowed audiences and become the darlings of WGBH, where the group has recorded. A recent concert featured soloist Josh Weilerstein (formerly the group's concertmaster and now an assistant conductor with the New York Philharmonic) playing an Astor Piazzolla piece better than any recording you can find on iTunes. The level of musicianship is nothing short of astonishing.

4. EMMANUEL AND TRINITY CHURCH

For free, world-class classical music in magnificent settings, a lot of people overlook the obvious: churches. On Newbury Street, the neo-gothic Emmanuel Church has been hosting Bach's cantatas—sacred music composed for specific dates on the Christian calendar—in the correct liturgical context, in the order Bach wrote them, on Sundays from Sept. through May since 1970. It's one of the few churches in the world that does, and at such a level of excellence that famed opera director Peter Sellars cites it as formative to his musical education. Meanwhile, inside H.H. Richardson's Copley Square masterpiece, Trinity Church offers Friday organ concerts by some of the world's best soloists, on two of the only organs in Boston that have been meticulously maintained and updated since the original was installed by Hilborne Roosevelt in 1876. Both options are enough to make an agnostic question his judgment.

5. THE LYRIC STAGE COMPANY

Boston is a smart town, so not surprisingly, there are a lot of talented local playwrights, directors, actors and designers. The Lyric is there to foster them. Founded in 1974, it was housed for a time in a 100-seat theater over a hardware store on Charles Street and settled in its current home at the YWCA in 1990. After some lackluster programming, the visionary Spiro Veloudos took over, and 18 Elliot Norton awards later, he's proven that championing local talent results in consistently excellent theater. The Curse of the Bambino was its biggest homerun to date (pun intended). Even now that the curse has been lifted, the Lyric still consistently hits 'em out of the ballpark with productions like 2008's The Mystery of Irma Vep, 2009's Dead Man's Cell Phone (which earned high praise from The New York Times) and last year's The Temperamentals.

6. THE FLOORLORDS AND THE BOSTON TAP COMPANY

Featured performers under the umbrella of One Love Entertainment, these two crews give Boston its street cred in the urban dance world and are amazing to watch. For more than three decades, the Floorlords have pushed the boundaries of b-boying (aka break dancing). A family affair, cofounder and current president Lino Delgado has spawned a dynasty that includes his son and nephew, who've won world championships. They've shared a stage with big names in hip-hop and won countless awards (Mayor Menino proclaimed June 25 Floorlords Day in Boston). Meanwhile, Boston Tap Co. was founded by Sean Fielder, who starred in the Broadway musical Bring in 'Da Noise, Bring in 'Da Funk and performed for Hillary Clinton, Jay Leno and CNN. He formed Boston Tap Co. in 2007, and his group has appeared everywhere from the Topsfield Fair to Jacob's Pillow. Its annual performance, called Rhythm in the Night, includes tap, spoken word and other dance forms. Any time you get the chance to see either, be prepared to have your eyes pop out of your head.

7. NEW REPERTORY THEATRE

Quietly toiling away in Watertown at the Arsenal Center for the Arts, this group stages consistently strong performances in two spaces, a 340-seat and a spiffy black-box theater. In addition to mounting top-notch revivals of favorites like Speed-the-Plow, Ragtime and The Threepenny Opera, the theater is committed to presenting new, provocative and thought-provoking work. Since its inception in 1984, New Rep has produced 63 East Coast, New England, Boston or world premieres by playwrights like Athol Fugard. It's earned them 22 Elliot Norton awards (at least one for every other year they've been around), as well as some breathless praise from critics. It might not be in the middle of the Theater District, but the tickets are cheaper, and you can actually find a parking space.

8. RAW: NATURAL BORN ARTISTS

The Boston chapter of a 54-city artists' collaborative, the group seeks to showcase the finest new talent in a wildly eclectic array of media: film, fashion, dance, music, visual art, performance art, and even makeup and hairstyling. The organization provides the resources necessary to expose emerging talent, specifically artists within the first decade of their careers. Once a month, from February through October, it takes over space at a nightclub or other venue large enough to host a party that's been described as "a circus of creativity." Which means you might see fire dancers, belly dancers or someone suspended from the ceiling and twirling around while reciting poetry. The beauty lies in the unexpected. That, and the fact that admission is only $10, and there's usually a full bar.

9. LUMINARIUM DANCE COMPANY

Modern dance gets short shrift these days, often dismissed with the old stereotype of people in leotards making jerky movements to convey bitter alienation. Think again. Founded in 2010 by Merli V. Guerra and Kimberleigh Holman, the Cambridge-based (what did you expect?) company calls itself "a think tank, a museum, a gallery for contemporary dance and for contemporary ideas." If that sounds a bit nebulous, that's only because it's hard to pin down performances that might include movement set to music, video, lighting, drums or what-have-you. In the words of one critic: "Luminarium Dance Company presented six seemingly disjointed pieces and brought them together to create an exploration of the human experience unlike any other I have seen." Just try and typecast that.

10. WHISTLER IN THE DARK THEATRE

Now in its eighth season, this Boston-based ensemble has produced 21 full-length plays under the rubric of "unknowing the known." The group's aim is to present "highly theatrical and physically inventive plays that question and challenge our assumptions about the world in which we live and the rules we live by." Their two current productions, now playing at the Charlestown Working Theater, are George Farquhar's Restoration comedy The Recruiting Officer, alongside Our Country's Good, a play set in the penal colony of 18th-century Australia, in which the hero attempts to mount a production of The Recruiting Officer, despite the fact that he only has two scripts, a largely illiterate cast of convicts and a leading lady who's headed for the gallows. If that's not theatrical, we don't know what is.

Through the Looking Glasses

ON A (FILM) ROLL

SHUTTING DOWN Photoshop and embracing the past, the artists in The Things That Seem and Those That Are: Reshaping Photography Through Alternative Processes showcase 21st-century takes on 19th-century forms. The photographers use methods like cyanotype and ambrotype, in which pictures are developed through painstaking chemical concoctions, and negatives are placed on glass plates for development. The subjects in these meticulously crafted images range from a bathhouse in Budapest to a Vatican bride in Rome. Join them in the darkroom at Panopticon Gallery through April 1. JACLYN DIAZ

Beyond the Pale

Anyone who's ever been on a job interview or first date knows the power of perception. For Lalita Bharvani, an Indian woman who loses her natural skin pigment due to vitiligo, the threads between perception and identity are more intrinsically tangled. Julie Mallozzi's documentary, Indelible Lalita, follows Bharvani from her native country, where she fears stigma and limited marriage options, as she discovers herself around the world. After moving to Canada, where the harsh weather conditions fast track her disease, she's diagnosed with breast and ovarian cancer. Through these tragedies, Bharvani learns about self, sacrifice and how beauty is more than skin deep. See Bharvani's true colors on March 23 at the Brattle Theatre.

Reviews by Sean Burns

Anna Karenina ★ Staggeringly misconceived on just about every level, director Joe Wright's pointless, show-offy adaptation of Tolstoy's classic for some baffling reason takes place on a stage. (Did nobody tell the director that Anna Karenina is a novel, not a play?) This oft told tale in which every unhappy family is unhappy in its own way gets whittled down to the quick by Tom Stoppard's adaptation. All the short scenes convey only the most crucial plot information and then we're onto the next. Not that anyone can even pay attention to the story anyways, with Wright's camera whizzing to and fro around the deliberately artificial set designs and cranking up the ominous foreshadowing. (There should be a drinking game involving every time we see a train.) Keira Knightley plays to the rafters in the title role, which is perhaps the only way she's noticed over the production's din. The stage-bound gimmick makes no sense, and I haven't seen a picture this visually and audibly cluttered since Moulin Rouge. Bring aspirin. (At West Newton.)

Amour ★★ ½ Georges (Jean-Louis Trintignant) and Anne (Emmanuelle Riva) are retired music teachers in their 80s, comfortably settled into their twilight years in a vast Parisian apartment. Yet a mysterious pre-credit sequence has warned us of unfathomable darkness on the horizon. Clouds begin gathering one morning when Anne goes blank over breakfast. It was most likely a stroke, and another will follow. Soon comes partial paralysis and then loss of speech. Director Michael Haneke keeps the camera locked in the middle distance, fading in and fading out on Anne's advancing disintegration within rigidly composed frames. It's a chilling, pitiless vision that offers no relief, just a portrait of decline. Once you know where Amour is going (and the prologue leaves viewers little reason to assume otherwise), there's nothing left but to run out the clock. I believe that might be the point, but it doesn't make it any easier to watch. This is a brilliantly acted, impeccably crafted movie that I never, ever want to see again. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Beautiful Creatures ★ ½ Here's another gobbledygook of Y.A. paranormal romance, this one arriving on the heels of the comparatively lean and considerably less ambitious Warm Bodies. Beautiful Creatures finds the fine writer/director Richard LaGravenese mired in a swamp of overplotted teensploitation nonsense with a cast that's way too good for the room, and knows it. Based on a sprawling novel by Kami Garcia and Margaret Stohl, this curious picture stars Alden Ehrenreich as a swaggering, free-spirited teenager biding his time in the backwoods of South Carolina, reading banned books for kicks. He finally puts down that dog-eared copy of Slaughterhouse-Five to pay attention to the new girl in school (Alice Englert), who may or may not be a witch. Yeah, it's Twilight redux minus the vaguely psychotic abstinence lectures, plus a couple of scenery-chewing turns by Jeremy Irons and Emma Thompson. There's an air of contempt to the picture, with a lot of talented actors openly acknowledging that they probably should be doing something more productive with their time. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Broken City ★★★ Mark Wahlberg's annual entry in the January release dump (last year's was the not-bad Contraband) is a cynical little neo-noir elevated by Russell Crowe's magnificently oily, hambone performance as the cuckolded mayor of New York City, who hires Marky Mark's alcoholic thug private eye to keep tabs on his wandering wife (Catherine Zeta-Jones.) Of course there's also a close election to be dealt with and Crowe's possibly gay opponent (Barry Pepper) knows a thing or two about a shady real estate deal that just lined everybody's pockets. Scripted by first-timer Brian Tucker, Broken City is lowercase Bogart and wannabe Sidney Lumet, but not without its own, admittedly minor, pleasures. The movie has a jaded, boorish spirit embodied with lip-smacking ease by the two alpha male leads. There's even a pause to make time for a delightful tangent in which our hero falls off the wagon and insults art-film metrosexuals. Director Allen Hughes keeps the camera close and the edits crisp. No great shakes, but it's a solid B-movie programmer. (In the suburbs.)

Bullet to the Head ★★ ½ An agreeably pared-down meathead vehicle, legendary director Walter Hill's latest slab of pulp stars Sylvester Stallone as an aging hit man who teams up with a straight-arrow cop (Fast & Furious' Sung Kang) to avenge his dead partner and kill most of the people in New Orleans. Based on a French graphic novel, Alessandro Camon's screenplay is barely functional direct-to-video fodder, enlivened by Hill's crisp editing, some offhanded brutality and one of Stallone's more amusing performances. Rolling his eyes at notions of common decency, Sly's Jimmy Bobo (what a name!) lackadaisically slaughters his way through a slew of crooked cops and sleazy politicians with an air of annoyance, like he's just been woken up from a nap. The picture proudly resides in a retro B-movie gutter full of gratuitous nudity, casual drug use, racial slurs and self-consciously hard-boiled dialogue. Every conversation seems to end with somebody getting shot in the face. Your personal mileage may vary, but I enjoy this kind of junk. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Django Unchained ★★★ Quentin Tarantino's blaxploitation spaghetti western is ugly, confrontational and hilarious, even though it goes on about an hour longer than it should. Jamie Foxx stars as a taciturn slave freed by a German bounty hunter (the always delightful Christoph Waltz) who bears the unsubtle name of Dr. King. The two take on the Ku Klux Klan, led by a terribly amusing Don Johnson, while Tarantino indulges his patented penchant for introducing mundane human quirks into a heightened genre setting. Too bad the film grinds to a halt when they arrive at the sordid plantation owned by Calvin Candie, played by Leonardo DiCaprio, clearly enjoying his first turn as a villain. There's a sneaky-great performance from Samuel L. Jackson, looking like he walked off a box of rice and playing a servant who's only as deferential as he needs to be when white people are around. At heart, this is rotgut wish-fulfillment fantasy—amusing enough but lacking the shadings to carry off an absurd 165-minute running time. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Gangster Squad ★ ½ Zombieland director Ruben Fleischer's unintentionally funny new film is so slick and glossy, I almost slipped on it. Half of Hollywood's cool crowd has been laughably miscast to put on an anachronistic fashion show, caring not a whit for historical accuracy or any semblance of period detail. The 1940s jargon clangs with the contemporary performances, and every set looks like a soundstage built yesterday. The Ellroy for Dummies plot concerns legendary racketeer Mickey Cohen, played here by Sean Penn beneath hideous prosthetic makeup and grotesque physical contortions. Josh Brolin's incorruptible cop, who wears one sour facial expression the whole movie, is recruited by Nick Nolte's wheezy police chief to head up a crew of vigilantes who leave their badges at home to take out Cohen's L.A. gambling operations by any means necessary. Ryan Gosling tackles the Doc Holliday role of a morally dubious, skirt-chasing lush by amusing himself in the ludicrous film in which he's trapped. His omnipresent smirk betrays a contempt for the material rivaled only by my own. (In the suburbs.)

A Good Day to Die Hard ★ ½ The fifth and sorriest installment of the now 25-year-old franchise is so far removed from the excellent original that it should be called Die Hard in Name Only. Bruce Willis' New York cop John McClane, who, once upon a time, was vulnerable and charismatic, is now a bulletproof, sleepwalking bully, bulldozing his way through Russia where his estranged son (Jai Courtney) is supposedly on trial for murder. After a prison-break car chase that occupies practically a third of the movie, we find out the kid is actually an undercover CIA agent, so he and his dear old dad spend the rest of the picture bickering about their family issues while being shot at by helicopters and jumping off exploding buildings, all without breaking a sweat. A Good Day to Die Hard is dumb, noisy and barely has enough story to support the 97 minutes of one-note cacophony. Willis snoozes along like a bored jerk. We're a long way from Nakatomi Plaza. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Les Miserables ★ ½ For the benefit of anyone who hasn't encountered Victor Hugo's story in any of its incarnations over the years, Hugh Jackman stars as Jean Valjean, a noble fellow who did years of hard labor after stealing a loaf of bread, which earns him the enmity of Russell Crowe's inexhaustible tyrant cop, Javert. There's much ado about Anne Hathaway's Fantine, a willowy young lass adrift in squalor and prostitution. Somewhere in this soap opera, the Paris Uprising of 1832 breaks out, and many, many, many years go by. The songs are catchy earworms—there's a reason this thing has remained on stage for decades—but, if there's a more poorly directed film this year, I haven't seen it. Director Tom Hooper has a problematic affinity for wide-angle lenses and the handheld camera. Gone is any sense of Broadway spectacle. Instead, we're stuck with grimy, underpopulated soundstage sets and shaky close-ups. When newcomer Samantha Barks belts out the karaoke staple "On My Own," Hooper can't even keep her head in the shot. This is an aesthetic crime. (At West Newton.)

Life of Pi ★★ ½ Director Ang Lee's awkward adaptation of Yann Martel's best-seller is visually rapturous and aurally excruciating. This metaphor-laden tale of a boy stranded at sea on a lifeboat with a hungry Bengal tiger is a marvel of compositions and cutting-edge special effects. (The 3-D is actually pretty nifty, for a change.) The film's most compelling segments showcase the boy's endless ingenuity as he finds clever ways to survive under impossible conditions while traveling with a companion who'd just as soon have him for lunch. It's kind of like Cast Away, if Wilson had wanted to eat Tom Hanks. But the lyrical visuals are constantly undone by the screenplay's dull literal-mindedness. We keep cutting back to Irrfan Kahn as the adult Pi telling his story to a writer (Rafe Spall) who seems to only exist so there's a white guy in the movie. There's no ambiguity or mystery here, as Khan explicitly recites the subtext directly into the camera. You'll wish you could watch it with the sound muted. (In the suburbs.)

Lincoln ★★★★ Steven Spielberg's Lincoln is a remarkable film for many reasons, but first and foremost, it's nimble-footed, crowd-pleasing entertainment. The film is funny. Lincoln himself is really funny. Tasked with dramatizing some of the most significant moments of the 19th century, Spielberg shoots the picture as a bustling ensemble comedy. There's little pageantry here, just a lot of deeply flawed, quicksilver wits trying to muddle their way through the course of American history. A lot of the time, Lincoln feels like a Robert Altman movie, which is just about the highest compliment I can pay these days. Daniel

Legend Has It

Führer Folklore

Cate Shortland's Lore follows the children of Nazi supporters through the Black Forest in post-WWII Germany.

Day-Lewis sneaks up underneath the role, wearing the stovepipe hat and chin beard not as iconic emblems, but as the affectations of a jack-legged, folksy country lawyer who just so happens to be the smartest guy in the room. Spielberg handles the passing of the 13th Amendment like the rousing climax of a misfit underdog sports movie, which probably explains why this is one of the most purely enjoyable movies of the year. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Lore ★★★ ½ I guess I never stopped to wonder what happened to all those cuties in the Hitler Youth after their parents lost the war. This tough-minded, visceral picture from Australian director Cate Shortland follows a gaggle of stern Aryan kids abandoned after their S.S. officer parents are taken away by the Allies. We see all this through the eyes of the eldest, Hannalore, played with a sharp edge by Saskia Rosendahl. She's left in charge of leading her siblings—including a newborn baby—through the Black Forest to their grandmother's house, and the only help comes from a dashing young Jewish lad, which naturally pits Hannalore's burgeoning sexuality against her deeply ingrained bigotry. Germany immediately after the fall is a deadly maze of looting, violence and desperation, shot in tight, low-angle close-ups to approximate the characters' point of view. Lore is a tough, survivalist fable that stays with you. (At Kendall Square Cinema.)

Side Effects ★★ Reportedly Steven Soderbergh's final theatrical feature before his self-imposed retirement, this junky throwback to Reagan-era sex thrillers is hardly a fitting swan song. Beginning as an exposé of America's prescription drug addiction, the film stars Rooney Mara as the clinically depressed wife of Channing Tatum's recently sprung jailbird. She mopes around all day and drives her car into walls until a shrink, played by Jude Law, writes a prescription for the amusingly named "Ablixa." Suddenly she's sexy and funny again, but you can probably tell by the movie's title that this miracle drug ain't all it's cracked up to be. After a promising setup, the screenplay (by frequent Soderbergh collaborator Scott Z. Burns) abruptly abandons the timely Big Pharma subject matter and turns into a much stuffier version of something you'd find on late-night cable. Soderbergh has no trash sensibility, approaching the silly screenplay with his trademark clinical dispassion. Side Effects feels like it should've been made 20 years ago with Michael Douglas and Demi Moore. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Skyfall ★★ ½ It's been four years since James Bond went rogue in the bloody, unloved Quantum of Solace. Now the series has been rebooted all over again, but since it was already rebooted in 2006's Casino Royale, it's hard to shake the feeling that 007 has spent the past several years running in place. Once again played with shark-like cunning by the invaluable Daniel Craig, our burnt-out international man of mystery disappears after a botched mission leaves him presumed dead. Lured back to her majesty's secret service by an attack on his beloved M (Judi Dench), Bond's drunk and out of shape, half a step behind. Director Sam Mendes can't ever find a handle on the movie's tone. Abrupt bursts of cold-blooded violence clang against the silly master plans of the baddie played by a campy Javier Bardem. The movie is cluttered with self-congratulatory nods to Bond's 50th anniversary on the big screen, but

Skyfall feels more like The Dark Knight Rises than From Russia With Love. Still, it's worth seeing for the gorgeous digital video cinematography by the legendary Roger Deakins. (In the suburbs.)

Upside Down ★ ½ This visually adventurous, aggressively stupid sci-fi curio from director Juan Solanas stars the ever-charmless Jim Sturgess and a game Kirsten Dunst as a couple of star-crossed lovers living on neighboring planets that orbit in such close proximity that the inhabitants can chat with one another from mountaintops. Solanas hews close to the Romeo and Juliet playbook, positioning his two globes as haves vs. have-nots and trying to work some sort of social commentary into a story that's just plain goofy. Relying so heavily on computer-generated effects that it looks more like a cartoon than a movie, Upside Down doesn't dramatize much of a story. Instead, the characters just stand around in exotically rendered vistas spouting gargantuan globs of exposition at one another. The fact that Sturgess and Dunst are named Adam and Eden probably tells you everything you need to know about the lofty, putrid screenplay. (At Kendall Square.)

Warm Bodies ★★ ½ Working from a popular novel by Isaac Marion, writer/director Jonathan Levine takes an unexpectedly clever spin around some well-trod terrain. Our hero, R (Nicholas Hoult, who'll make you feel very old when you realize he's the kid from About a Boy), is an undead hipster who falls head over heels with Teresa Palmer's feisty heroine, Julie, sometime after the end of the world. It's an awkward courtship, to say the least. But a strange thing happens as he hangs out with her. R stops rotting and starts remembering things. Apparently, love does conquer all, even zombiehood. Marion's book was a riff on Romeo and Juliet (in case the main character's names didn't tip you off), but it's easy to view Levine's adaptation as a devastatingly funny send-up of the Twilight phenomenon. I was at a Barnes & Noble recently and saw an entire section devoted to "teen paranormal romance." Warm Bodies is at its funniest when the film is digging into the messy details of just how such romances might work. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wreck-It Ralph ★★ ½ Video games get the Toy Story treatment in this initially promising but ultimately enervating Disney animated feature. John C. Reilly gives his all in a curiously affecting performance as the villain in a Donkey Kong ripoff. But that's just his day job. Secretly, he yearns to be a hero. There's no shortage of wonder in the arcade after-hours, when all the different game characters are free to mingle. But Wreck-It Ralph disappointingly gives up on all these limitless possibilities and traps Ralph in a garish Mario Kart–looking kiddie game with an annoying sidekick (Sara Silverman). The candy colors become a strain on the eyes, and the movie's overly elaborate plot becomes just a list of arbitrary rules as to what characters can or can't do, depending on the requirements of the screenplay. There are some droll touches here, particularly Jane Lynch as a gung-ho commando, plus a cameo from Q-Bert. But what should've been Who Framed Roger Rabbit for the Nintendo era is instead a giant missed opportunity. (At West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Zero Dark Thirty ★★★★ Director Kathryn Bigelow's riveting, white-knuckle procedural about the 10-year manhunt for Osama Bin Laden has unfortunately become a platform for political grandstanding while being widely, shamefully misunderstood. Based on first-hand accounts given to journalist-turned-screenwriter Mark Boal, the film streamlines a decade of relentless investigation into a lightning-fast two hours and 40 minutes. It focuses on a fledgling agent (Jessica Chastain) who's consumed with tracking down and killing Bin Laden. Folks seem confounded by Bigelow and Boal's no B.S. approach to the material. Controversial interrogation techniques at CIA black-ops sites are presented without comment or editorializing, as the filmmakers trust the audience to act like adults and come to their own conclusions. Moving from analog to digital surveillance as the years pass, Zero Dark Thirty is a ripping suspense thriller, as Bigelow's exquisite command of sound, camera placement and editing draw almost unbearable tension from a story we all know. There's no triumphalism, and even if we "win" in the end, the movie remains more concerned with how much has been lost. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Somerville and in the suburbs.)

Music Edited by Hannah Lott-Schwartz

Rolling Solo

Clarence Greenwood, better known as the one-man band Citizen Cope, continues blending and bending genres with his newest album, One Lovely Day. After shuffling between major label deals, Greenwood is now on his own. He's been described as everything from hip-hop to folk and is influenced by everyone from Sly Stone to John Lennon. As one citizen, he draws inspiration from many others. His mellow tunes overflow with honest, gritty lyrics, and more than 10 years after his debut, Citizen Cope still performs with the same spirit and soul that earned him renown. See him at the Wilbur Theatre on March 14.
